Schools cut buses amid lack of drivers

Parents turn elsewhere to find rides for students

Kayla Jimenez
USA TODAY

Before sunrise on school days, 7-year-old Laike Glesne used to lug his backpack from a Chicago public bus to a train and then a second train to get to his second grade classroom 20 miles south of his house.

During the two-hour commute last school year, Laike and his mother, Marissa Lichwick-Glesne, passed unhoused people sleeping in the streets, partiers heading home and angry people shouting expletives. The day would just be starting and the mother and son wouldn't return home until 7 p.m. – leaving him no time for after-school activities.

Lichwick-Glesne didn't know this morning commute would be their reality when she enrolled her son at Ted Lenart Regional Gifted Center, a school where high-achieving kids learn above grade level, in kindergarten. At the beginning of last school year, Chicago Public Schools announced it would suspend bus service for the 5,500 students who attend magnet and selective enrollment programs far from their homes, citing school bus driver shortages.

School buses in many parts of the country are becoming increasingly difficult for students to access.

JOE RONDONE/USA TODAY NETWORK

Lichwick-Glesne said she panicked and thought, "How am I going to get him to school?"

Chicago Public Schools doubled down on that decision this year along with many other districts across the country that have eliminated or trimmed bus services over the past several years.

The bus driver shortage that accelerated during the pandemic seems to have become an intractable problem for schools. The yellow school bus, once an American staple for getting kids from point A to point B and a tool that helped ensure equal access to schools, is now so difficult to access that some parents are using ride-sharing services, such as HopSkipDrive, and cutting back on work so they can get their kids to school. The number of bus drivers decreased by 15% between September 2019 and September 2023, according to the Economic Policy Institute.

Thousands of students who need transportation will be without school buses this year. Many in Hawaii's Central Oahu and East Hawaii Island were told they wouldn't have a school bus this fall, according to an announcement from the state's Department of

'Dystopian technologies' could backfire, wary experts warn

SANTA CLARA COUNTY, Calif. – Luke Iseman and Andrew Song weren't doing anything illegal hauling around 200-pound cylinders of sulfur dioxide in Song's RV to pump into weather balloons.

Against the law, no. Controversial? Absolutely.

On a golden California summer evening at the rural edge of Silicon Valley, Song pumped 3.8 pounds of the gas into the balloon while Iseman readied a small Styrofoam box holding an altimeter and locator module.

Next, Iseman attached the balloon's neck to a cylinder of helium. It slowly filled and rose until it became a giant floating orb taller than he was.

With a gentle push, he sent the biodegradable latex globe lofting into the air. It rose past a giant oak tree and drifted into the clear evening sky.

At just over 14 miles up, well above the air space of commercial planes, the balloon popped, sending its tiny payload of invisible yet reflective gas into the stratosphere.

Once the weather balloon rises to the upper stratosphere and pops, Making Sunsets expects the gas it releases to slightly reflect the sun's rays, infinitesimally cooling the earth.

What do remote employees do all day?

Survey shows a lot more going on besides work

Jessica Guynn
USA TODAY

What do remote and hybrid workers do all day?

They often brag about how productive they are with no gossipy colleagues to distract them or time wasted on long commutes.

But a new survey is offering fresh insights into how remote workers really spend their time. Spoiler alert: It's not all white papers and PowerPoint presentations.

While employees in the office might kill time messaging friends or flipping through TikTok, remote workers take advantage of being far from the watchful gaze of bosses to chip away at personal to-do lists or to goof off.

CHAYTEE/GETTY IMAGES

"Employees are making their own rules to accommodate the demands of high-pressure work environments."

Wendy Smith, SurveyMonkey

Nearly half of remote workers multitask on work calls or complete household chores like unloading the dishwasher or doing a load of laundry, according to the SurveyMonkey poll of 3,117 full-time workers in the United States.

A third take advantage of the flexibility of remote work to run errands, whether popping out to the grocery store or picking up dry cleaning.

Sleeping on the job? It happens more than you might think. One in 5 remote workers confessed to taking a nap.

Some 17% of remote workers said they worked from another location without telling anyone or watched TV or played video games. A small percentage – 4% – admitted to working another job.

Multitasking during Zoom calls is another common pastime.

Four dead in shooting in Birmingham, Ala.

John Bacon
USA TODAY

At least four people were killed, more than a dozen were wounded and an intensive search was underway Sunday in Birmingham, Alabama, for gunmen who fired into a crowd in the city's entertainment district in what the police chief described as a "hit."

Birmingham police Chief Scott Thur-

mond said two men and a woman died at the scene Saturday night and a man died a short time later at a local hospital. He said about 17 people were wounded. First responders rushed some of them to hospitals while others traveled to medical centers on their own.

Thurmond said the gunmen drove up around 11 p.m., got out and fired into the crowd on the streets in the Five Points South district, a popular area of shops, bars and restaurants. The shooters then fled the scene, where more than 100 shell casings were found, he said.

The victims apparently included the person who was targeted, he said. He added he did not know the motive.

"We believe there was a hit, if you will, on that particular person," he said.

Thurmond said no arrests had been made and investigators were viewing video surveillance recordings for clues. The FBI and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives were assisting in the investigation.

Thurmond urged the public to provide any information they might have.

Birmingham Mayor Randall Woodfin said a Glock "switch" had been used that converts semiautomatic handguns into automatic weapons.

"This is not the first occasion, unfortunately, in 2024 where we've seen the style of weapons, the number of bullets on the scene ... automatic weapons being used in our streets," Woodfin said.

Dajon Singleton told WBMA-TV he was driving into the area Saturday when he saw the emergency response and chaos on the streets as people ran and screamed. He saw five or six people taken away on stretchers, he said.

"Very devastating, sad," he said. "The grieving-type screaming ... That's when I instantly knew someone lost a loved one."

Mother of Ga. school shooting suspect is indicted

Eduardo Cuevas
USA TODAY

The mother of the 14-year-old Georgia student charged in the Apalachee High School shooting that killed four people has been indicted in a domestic violence case involving her mother in 2023, according to reports.

On Monday, a grand jury indicted Marcee Gray, 43, on charges of exploiting and intimidating a disabled person or elderly adult, false imprisonment, criminal damage to property and theft, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Saturday.

The charges are unrelated to the mass shooting her son, Colt, is accused of committing on Sept. 4 that killed teachers Cristina Irimie, 53, and Richard Aspinwall, 39, and students Mason Schermerhorn and Christian Angulo, both 14. Nine other students were injured in the incident.

The Georgia Bureau of Investigation also arrested the teen's father, Colin Gray, on Sept. 5, and prosecutors have charged him with two counts of murder, four counts of involuntary manslaughter and eight counts of child cruelty.

Marcee Gray could face up to 20 years in jail related to the felony charge of elder exploitation, the newspaper said. USA TODAY could not reach Gray for comment.

The case reportedly stems from Gray trying to have her mother, Deborah Polhamus, now 74, go with her to confront Colin Gray, her ex-husband, on Nov. 3, 2023. According to the newspaper, Polhamus refused to go, and then Gray taped her 73-year-old mother to a chair for nearly a day, taking her cellphone and damaging her home in Fitzgerald, Georgia.

The next day, on Nov. 4, 2023, a family friend found Polhamus, the newspaper reported. That day, court records show, police in a separate case said Marcee Gray damaged Colin Gray's work truck in Barrow County, about 3.5 hours away.

Two days later, on Nov. 6, a Barrow County Sheriff's deputy arrested Marcee Gray for allegedly concealing her Nissan Rogue with different tags and having fentanyl, methamphetamine and muscle relaxants, court records show.

Prosecutors charged her in December with concealing her license plate, damaging property and criminal trespass and family violence. She pleaded guilty, and a local judge sentenced her to five years in jail, with the first 46 days spent in confinement and credit for time she spent from Nov. 6, and the remaining time on probation.

Marcee Gray has reportedly apologized to parents and families affected by the school shooting. The Washington Post reported that Marcee Gray said she alerted the school on the morning of the shooting for an "extreme emergency" and that officials needed to find her son.

A week after the incident, mourners visit a memorial to the victims of the Apalachee High School shooting in Barrow County, Ga., on Sept. 11.

School buses

Education. The Houston Independent School District cut bus services to save the school district $3 million during the 2024-25 school year. And the Jefferson County Board of Education in Kentucky eliminated bus routes for kids who attend traditional and magnet schools in the state's largest school district.

Those districts are among many that have severed kids' access to school buses in recent years.

In the aftermath, frustrated parents have had to find other means of getting their kids to school, including ride-sharing services, public transportation and carpools.

Education experts worry about the long-term impact of poor or patchy transportation on student attendance and learning outcomes.

Student learning suffers when school officials cut bus routes because kids miss instruction time, said Michael Gottfried, a professor at the University of Pennsylvania and applied economist who is an expert in the economics of education and education policy. Chronic absenteeism nearly doubled from 15% to 26% between 2018 and 2023, according to a report from the American Enterprise Institute. Children are considered chronically absent if they miss 10% or more of the school year.

"Taking away a mechanism that actually gets kids to school is hugely problematic," Gottfried said. "This could be a solution all families could rely on during the absenteeism crisis."

Scramble to find transportation

Families like Lichwick-Glesne's are facing the repercussions of bus service being eliminated.

Until early August, Lichwick-Glesne said she often cried knowing there wasn't a school-provided option for her son. She felt helpless because she has epilepsy and does not have a driver's license. She and her husband sometimes argued about the best solution for their son.

The family's despair ended on Aug. 2 when they heard Laike was accepted at another gifted school just a mile away. This school year, the mother and son only have to take one public bus to school, and they sleep in later and arrive home earlier, Lichwick-Glesne said. They still don't have access to a school bus, but she considers her family among the lucky ones.

They love the old school, but "we have no choice because we lost busing," she said.

Lichwick-Glesne's frustration inspired her to join Chicago Parents for School Buses, advocating for Chicago Public Schools to find transportation alternatives for low-income families.

Paul Wargaski, another member of the parents group, has two children on the autism spectrum who attend magnet and specialized schools. The kids qualify for the district's school-provided transportation. One of his children gets to school through a carpool route and the other child is picked up by a ride-sharing company and is transported by a driver to school.

Before last year, both kids went to school on a yellow school bus with many other students, which he preferred.

The new options work for his family even though last school year, he had to cut his shifts short at work or move around his schedule to be there for pick up and drop off. He yearns for the school bus option because it provided his kids an opportunity for socialization.

While parents in Chicago have moved on, using alternative options for school, New Jersey families have continued fighting their school district's decision to eliminate routes due to budget cuts.

Bus routes have gotten so sparse in Jefferson County Public Schools that a group of kids in the Louisville, Kentucky, district created a hip-hop video with their music arts program to ask administrators "Where my bus at?" — the title of their viral video.

The district threatened to cut school bus access for Braylon Blocker, 12, and his schoolmates this year. In the end, school officials eliminated transportation for students at all but two magnet and traditional schools and some kids like attending Academies of Louisville. The cuts were made due to a shortage of bus drivers, said Mark Hebert, a spokesperson for Jefferson County Public Schools.

The threat of losing his transportation and the cuts to buses in the district motivated Blocker to create the video with the hip-hop education program HHN2L and his student peers. After the video took off, many people across the nation shared stories with him and his peers about bus cuts in their districts, said NyRee Clayton-Taylor, one of the leaders of HHN2L.

Blocker said he often hears other kids at school singing "Where my bus at?" since the video rose in popularity. The way the song resonates makes Blocker feel satisfied that he tapped into something but also disappointed, knowing how many kids and their families across the country face the same problem.

"What I really want to happen is that everyone can have a bus, and parents don't have to worry about talking to kids in the morning," he said.

Data shows school bus decline

The problem emerged before the pandemic, according to data analyzed by the U.S. Education Department's National Center for Education. Yellow school bus service steadily declined from 2013 to 2019, according to data from School Bus Fleet.

During the 2019-2020 school year, many schools closed after the COVID-19 pandemic hit, leaving school bus drivers without work and adequate pay. Many found other employment by the time schools opened. Since then, the lack of drivers has reached crisis levels, according to national data that shows a drop between 2019 to 2023.

Employment and hiring of school bus drivers never fully recovered. Every state last year saw at least one major school bus driver shortage, according to a USA TODAY analysis.

How did we get to this moment?

School buses became a staple around the time when schools consolidated from one-classroom schoolhouses to larger buildings that could accommodate more kids in the 1900s, according to an account by the Smithsonian.

After the Supreme Court outlawed segregation in public schools in Brown v. Board of Education, buses were used to desegregate schools and ensure all kids could get to their neighborhood school, said Paul Reville, a professor of educational policy and administration at the Harvard Graduate School Education.

Today, only a patchwork of students have the option to travel on a yellow bus.

Most schools prioritize school buses for kids experiencing homelessness and, in some cases, special needs students. They are obligated to provide transit to those kids under federal law. Some states also require districts to transport kids who live far from school.

The way districts provide buses in some cases only to students who live far from their schools represents a shift from an era when desegregation was the priority, Reville said. This era of buses, he said, is in part a result of the increased movement toward school choice along with drivers shortages and budget decisions.

Finding innovative solutions

Some district leaders and principals have been rushing to provide families with alternatives, including public transportation, ride-sharing and mileage reimbursements.

Hawaii has offered families mileage reimbursements if they drive their kids to school or carpool with others and offering them public transportation passes. The state's governor made an emergency proclamation allowing kids to be transported to school in different types of vehicles and urging relaxed bus driver certification requirements.

Chicago Public Schools will try another alternative: offering bus stops where groups of students can access buses. The "hub stop" program, which exists elsewhere in the U.S., will roll out in the fall, district press secretary Sylvia Barragan said.

More families are also paying for ride-sharing services or carpooling. Districts — including those in Colorado, Florida and Indiana — have also turned to ride-sharing services to help kids who qualify for school-provided transportation at least since the pandemic.

Forecasters say brace for more fall heat

Many predict 'extended summer' weather

Doyle Rice
USA TODAY

If you're not quite ready to let go of summer, which officially ends Sunday, you may be in luck: The weather forecast for the United States for the months of October through December shows that warmer-than-average temperatures are likely for 46 of 50 states, federal forecasters at the Climate Prediction Center announced Thursday.

AccuWeather forecasters also are on board with the fiery fall forecast: "Fall is going to feel more like an extended summer for millions of Americans this year," said AccuWeather lead long-range expert Paul Pastelok. "Much of the country will experience a delayed transition to cooler temperatures this year, following a summer with intense heat."

Areas where warmer-than-average temperatures are most likely include eastern New England, southern Florida, and much of the Southwest, the Climate Prediction Center said. This includes the Phoenix area, which is still recovering from the record 113 straight 100-degree days it endured this summer.

Overall, parts of 46 states are in the "above-average temperature zone," including portions of Alaska and Hawaii. The only states where above-average temperatures aren't likely this fall include Washington, North Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. In those states, there are equal chances of above- and below-average temperatures, forecasters said.

What about rain and snow?

A damp fall is on tap for the Northeast, Great Lakes and Northwest, the Climate Prediction Center said, which only specified that above-average precipitation is likely, not whether it will fall as rain or snow.

The Southwest and southern Plains should see a drier-than-average fall. This will likely exacerbate drought conditions across those regions, the Climate Prediction Center said.

Hello La Niña?

Forecasters also said that La Niña is expected to form later this fall. The climate pattern – marked by a natural cooling of seawater in the tropical Pacific Ocean – is one of the main drivers of weather in the United States. Typically, during a La Niña winter, the southern tier of the nation sees dry, warm conditions while the north trends wetter.

According to the Climate Prediction Center: There is a 71% chance that La Niña will emerge during September-October-November. La Niña also expected to persist through January-March 2025. However, a strong event is unlikely. And "neutral" conditions are favored by the spring.

Climate

"Our goal," said Iseman, a serial entrepreneur, "is to cool the earth."

These two men, both veterans of storied tech incubator Y Combinator and with stints at multiple tech companies under their belts, sit at the bleeding edge of a global effort to protect the planet from climate change. Their company is called Make Sunsets.

At an infinitesimal scale, they are doing what giant volcanos have done since Earth's infancy – launching a slightly reflective gas high into the stratosphere where it deflects a tiny portion of the sun's energy – which incidentally also causes more colorful sunsets.

When Indonesia's Mount Tambora erupted in 1815, scientists say, the huge amount of spewed dust and sulfur dioxide lowered the global temperature that year by as much as 2 degrees.

But what Iseman and Song say are baby steps toward saving the planet, longtime climate scientists fear is the opening of a Pandora's box, leading to what could be a domino effect of catastrophic consequences.

"I agree this isn't the best way to do this – it should be an international coalition of countries and NGOs and led by brilliant scientists," said Iseman.

Unfortunately, he doesn't see that happening any time soon, he says with some heat.

"Way too many smart people are spending way too much time going on about politics and downsides and how some other thing would be ideal while the world literally burns."

He's content knowing the night's payroll was enough to offset 1,745 tons of carbon dioxide for a year, about 380 cars' worth.

'It's morphine'

For years, experts considered climate engineering, also known as geoengineering, a dangerous science fiction.

Confronted with ideas like fertilizing the world's seas to produce enormous algae blooms that would sink to the ocean floor, adding millions of tons of sulfur dioxide to the stratosphere each year or launching huge sprays of salt water into the air over oceans to make low-lying clouds whiter and longer lasting, they collectively threw up their hands in horror.

The Center for International Environmental Law calls geoengineering "dystopian technologies." Hands off Mother Earth has a manifesto signed by more than 100 organizations in 45 countries calling for a ban on all geoengineering field experiments. The ETC Group, an international activist group, monitors geoengineering attempts.

But something has changed in recent years: Some environmental groups are begrudgingly acknowledging that humans will almost certainly have to use some methods to try to cool Earth while carbon dioxide levels are lowered and that these could end up being part of a global coping mechanism for climate change.

"Environmental groups are realizing if they don't engage in the topic, it's not going to stop the conversation and research from happening, so they better engage or they won't have any say at all," said Katharine Ricke, a professor of cli-

Luke Iseman, left, and Andrew Song of Make Sunsets say they are making small steps to help save the planet from climate change. Critics worry unregulated and for-profit geoengineering could have serious, global consequences. Iseman acknowledges it's not ideal but says someone must act because "way too many smart people" aren't doing anything about it. ELIZABETH WEISE/USA TODAY mate science and global policy and strategy at the University of California, San Diego.

Figuring out geoengineering needs to happen quickly, because the decision point is probably coming sooner rather than later, said Wake Smith, a lecturer at the Yale School of the Environment whose most recent book is "Pandora's Toolbox, the Hopes and Hazards of Climate Intervention."

"I'm afraid the climate problem is worse than you think it is," he said. Geoengineering, especially the solar geoengineering that Make Sunsets does, isn't a solution but could buy time for the world to rapidly cut back on carbon emissions. "It isn't penicillin, it doesn't cure the disease," he said. "It's morphine, it helps while you're healing."

Scientists aren't yet sure what's the best metaphor for geoengineering. Is it medicinal morphine to give Earth time to heal? Or is it illicit opioids that could cause the planet further harm?

Given that uncertainty, many international groups still think it's far too dangerous to even experiment with.

And yet, despite those fears, Make Sunsets keeps launching its balloons.

What could go wrong?

Conservationists fear geoengineering could cool the earth too much or unevenly. It could damage ecosystems, disrupt global weather patterns or potentially make global warming dramatically worse if a geoengineering project were to suddenly stop.

It could lead to drought, famines and even wars if such efforts caused shifts in the monsoon rainfall patterns that much of Asia and Africa depend on for farming. Or it could supercharge storms. Or it could potentially allow one country to steal rainfall from another.

In one nightmare scenario, solar geoengineering efforts are deployed at a large scale globally and then suddenly stopped due to political in-fighting.

That would lead to a possible rebound effect.

Without artificial cooling, Earth might rapidly and chaotically warm, causing havoc far worse than slow warming. In another scenario, geoengineering cools one area of the globe more than another, furthering global inequity.

But no one knows if any of these will come to pass, which is why many scientists and an increasing number of conservationists think at least researching the various methods is important.

And always in the back of everyone's mind is the "moral hazard" fear that if stopgap measures are deployed that mask the results of skyrocketing carbon dioxide levels, the public may think it's now OK to keep burning coal, oil and natural gas – meaning the underlying cause of the problem only gets worse.

A startup does what was once unthinkable

Geoengineering technically comes in two flavors, one more controversial than the other.

The first is underway already: efforts to rid Earth's atmosphere of the excess carbon dioxide humanity has been pumping into it since the Industrial Revolution.

The second is more hypothetical – the ones that some fear could backfire spectacularly.

This category of geoengineering involves trying to find other ways to artificially cool Earth, to offset the damage done by greenhouse gasses while fossil fuel burning is ended and greenhouse gas levels slowly fall.

Make Sunsets' work falls in the second arena.

Some fear if Make Sunsets' type of solar geoengineering were ever done at scale, it could cause the earth to rebound to even higher temperatures if the sulfur dioxide treatments were stopped.

It's not so controversial to Iseman.

Smith said.

When asked "have you ever browsed social media while on a video or conference call at work," managers, executives and individual contributors, who have no supervisory responsibilities, were about even (22%, 20% and 21%, respectively), Smith said.

But managers and executives shopped online more frequently than individual contributors (16% and 14%, respectively, compared with 12% of individual contributors), Smith said. Different generations also have different work habits:

- 26% of millennials admit to taking a nap during the workday compared with 16% of Gen Xers.

- 18% of Gen Zers have worked another job compared with 2% of Gen Xers and 1% of boomers.

- 31% of Gen Zers have worked from another location without telling anyone compared with 16% of Gen Xers.

He notes humans already pump tons of sulfur dioxide into the atmosphere from burning fossil fuels every year. But that's in the lower atmosphere, where it can harm lungs but does nothing to reflect the sun's rays.

Make Sunsets aims higher, into the stratosphere, where the gas will linger about a year before falling back to Earth.

They are careful to alert the Federal Aviation Administration before each launch via a Notice to Airmen, as well as logging each balloon launch with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

By dark, the co-founders of the tiny startup have launched two more balloons at the behest of some of their 600 or so customers, each of whom pays to be part of what they see as not a solution but a stopgap.

"Someday, hopefully, this will lower the temperature slightly to buy us time while we stop burning fossil fuels," said Iseman.

Money changes the game

A new development has forced some experts to change their position on geoengineering: For-profit companies, like Make Sunsets, are entering the mix of what had been an entirely university-researcher-driven enterprise.

Questions of regulation and accountability remain unanswered. And so, many scientists say they want to be part of what is inevitably happening, rather than wishing it wouldn't.

"The movement in the startup space is really scary, honestly. The prospect of for-profit actors is alarming," said Ricke. "You have people lobbying for the deployment of technology not because it's necessarily good for the planet but because that's how investors make back their money."

The arrival of at least two companies looking to make money off geoengineering has heightened fears. Small-scale Make Sunsets has about 600 customers buying its "cooling credits," which pay for its launches.

But an America-Israeli startup called Stardust Solutions has also entered the scene. With $15 million in funding, it only recently became public about its ambition to create a solar geoengineering solution it could sell to governments or international entities.

As climate catastrophes continue, "people's perceptions of how the climate is changing the urgency of the situation is mounting," said Daniele Visioni, a professor of earth and atmospheric sciences at Cornell University who's studied climate intervention for the past decade.

The Sierra Club remains highly skeptical but acknowledges that "it might be good to start to study some of these things," said Patrick Drupp, director of climate policy and advocacy.

The Natural Resources Defense Council doesn't support deployment of solar radiation mitigation and wants to see international rules of the road for any tests, but it does support "limited" outdoor experiments that have been subject to independent review.

Who decides what can be done is a looming question, said Visioni.

"The stratosphere is a very unregulated piece of real estate," he said. "How do you stop a private actor from just launching a balloon?"

So far, the answer appears to be that you can't.

workers said they used the bathroom during calls while 21% said they browsed social media, 14% went on online shopping sprees, 12% did laundry and 9% cleaned the kitchen.

In a finding that may shock some, 4% said they fall asleep and 3% take a shower.

"Employees are making their own rules to accommodate the demands of high-pressure work environments," said Wendy Smith, senior manager of research science at SurveyMonkey. "One thing we uncovered was that what you might consider 'off-the-books behavior' is widespread."

And it's not just the rank-and-file. More than half of managers and 49% of executives multitask on work calls, too,

Smith said.

When asked "have you ever browsed social media while on a video or conference call at work," managers, executives and individual contributors, who have no supervisory responsibilities, were about even (22%, 20% and 21%, respectively), Smith said.

If humans warmed Earth, can't we just cool it? Here are some ideas

These climate-change-fighting ideas sound outlandish. Even if they did work, critics worry they could backfire spectacularly.

BY ELIZABETH WEISE AND STEPHEN J. BEARD/USA TODAY

Could we MacGyver our way out of climate change? Ask scientists and you'll get a range of answers: "Probably not." "Maybe?" and "Are you insane?"

And yet ideas for geoengineering – literally engineering ways to either lower carbon dioxide levels or temporarily cool the planet while they come down – are increasingly being floated as a climate stopgap, even though they seem more like movie plot lines than serious suggestions.

Dehydrate the stratosphere. Create bubble curtains to keep warm water from melting glaciers. Fill the skies with dust or gas to reflect the sun's rays. Add iron to the oceans so they can absorb more carbon dioxide. Build enormous industrial parks that do nothing but suck carbon dioxide out of the air and bury it deep underground.

The ideas sound outlandish, and even if they do work, critics worry they could backfire spectacularly. But amid the climate crisis, these moonshot ideas have gained attention from experts and investors.

There's a big catch: None of these ideas would allow humanity to keep burning fossil fuels without consequence. They're intended as a stopgap while people reduce fossil fuel use. Here's a look at a few ideas for how humans could help cool the planet:

Enhanced oil recovery

In a method called enhanced oil recovery, carbon dioxide is captured as a byproduct of fossil fuel burning or industrial processes like making cement. Mixed with water, the CO2 is injected into a nearly depleted oil field. It flushes residual oil from the rock formations toward a well where it can be pumped up. This is somewhat controversial because it results in more drilling for fossil fuels.

Direct air carbon capture

In direct air carbon capture, a large array of fans would suck air into filters that concentrate CO2, which is then pumped deep underground and stored. Because of the energy such a system would consume, it would need to operate on renewable energy to fully realize a decrease in CO2 from the atmosphere.

Solar geoengineering

In this approach, canisters either attached to balloons or high-altitude airplanes could spray an aerosol of sulfur dioxide in the stratosphere that could artificially cool the planet's surface by reflecting solar radiation back to space.

Marine cloud brightening

In marine cloud brightening, pump boats would spray large plumes of saltwater into the air. The idea is this would brighten low-lying clouds using sea salt crystals that attract moisture. The brightened clouds reflect solar energy.

Air curtain to protect glaciers

Glaciers melt from the intrusion of warm, deep and dense saline water creeping beneath them. One proposed idea calls for a "curtain" of air pumped through a long pipe that would divert the flow of warmer water away from the glacier.

Ocean fertilization

Fertilizing the oceans with iron could stimulate algae and plankton blooms, which would pull CO2 from the water into their bodies. The blooms eventually die off and sink to the ocean floor, carrying the CO2 with them.

Questions surround shooting of Ky. judge

Small town wonders why sheriff would pull trigger

Lucas Aulbach
USA TODAY NETWORK

WHITESBURG, Ky. – They’d been friends for years and once worked side-by-side in the county courthouse. They were two high-profile elected officials in a town where it seems like everybody knows each other.

So why, as he’s accused in court, did Letcher County Sheriff Shawn “Mickey” Stines walk into a private room inside the courthouse, pull out a gun and kill District Judge Kevin Mullins?

It’s an unprecedented crime in a town that can go years without a homicide. And the Thursday afternoon shooting left a gaping hole in the judicial system – Mullins was the county’s only judge, and its sheriff is behind bars in Leslie County, facing a first-degree murder charge after he surrendered on the scene.

With a population in 2020 of just less than 1,800 people, Whitesburg is tight-knit. Letcher County Commonwealth’s Attorney Matt Butler recused himself from the case due largely to family ties with the judge. The two were once married to a pair of sisters, and Butler said his two daughters called Mullins “unkie.”

And in that tight-knit community, Butler knows rumors spread like wildfire. In a video he posted Friday morning on social media, he told viewers he “would not be a source of gossip” and asked those in the region, many of whom have his cellphone number, to do the same.

“If you are only looking to gossip or to be a troublemaker or a stirrer-up of gossip, leave me out of that conversation and just don’t have that conversation,” Butler said. “Be more respectful.”

No motive has been publicly identified. Kentucky State Police didn’t provide one in the immediate aftermath of the shooting, which took place just before 3 p.m. Thursday. Nor did police host a news conference Friday. Stines’ first court appearance will likely take place next week and the three-sentence arrest citation offered few details. As of Saturday morning, Stines had not named an attorney.

In the meantime, Whitesburg, Letcher County and the rest of the region have been left only to speculate.

Mullins had no public discipline history from the Kentucky Bar Association and had a reputation of working with drug offenders to get them into treatment facilities instead of jails.

Stines, meanwhile, had been a fixture in the community for decades, working for years as bailiff in Mullins’ court before winning the race for sheriff in 2018. He had no plans to seek another term, he had said earlier this year.

Patty Wood, a legal assistant at a law office down the street from the courthouse, said her husband, former District Judge James Wood, “took (Stines) under his wing” while the sheriff was still a bailiff in his courtroom more than 15 years ago. If she saw Stines 10 times in a day, she said, “there was always a hug.”

“He would always say, ‘Do you need anything? If you need anything, call me,’” Patty Wood said. “Literally, no matter how many times I’d see him in a day, it was always a hug, it was always those specific words that he would say.”

She was at the law office when she heard about a shooting at the courthouse Thursday. She walked with attorney Jennifer Taylor to the scene, she said, where a crowd of stunned witnesses and onlookers had gathered.

“They said Kevin had been shot and Mickey shot him, and at that point, my heart had dropped,” Wood said. “That was the last thing that you could even think of happening.”

To Wood, it just doesn’t add up. And she isn’t the only one with questions.

Bill and Josephine Richardson have lived in Whitesburg since they helped found the Appalshop art center in 1969. The Richardsons had met both men but were closer with Stines. He was well-liked, Josephine Richardson said, and had pushed this year for a petition to allow alcohol sales throughout the county to add to its coffers, assuring residents he wouldn’t benefit financially because he wasn’t running for reelection.

The Richardsons said two people they’d spoken to said Stines “wasn’t himself.”

They’ve witnessed a lot, but they haven’t witnessed a scene like the one that unfolded Thursday. Their son, who lives in Somerset, called Josephine Richardson minutes after the shooting, she said, and warned his parents not to go downtown.

The area was packed with police, ambulances and onlookers and the nearby high school was on lockdown. A contingent of media swarmed the town, including reporters with LEX-18 and The New York Times.

Laci Wright, who works at nearby Coal City Coffee, watched the scene.

“Three ambulances drove by, and then you saw fire trucks, and the police cars, cop cars and all that stuff. It backed all the way up (to the end of the street),” she said.

The sheriff is a defendant in a different ongoing federal lawsuit and was deposed Monday for several hours. He has been accused of failing to train and supervise a deputy sheriff who traded favorable treatment for a woman on house arrest who didn’t want to return to the Letcher County jail in exchange for sexual favors in Mullins’ chambers, where there were no cameras at that time.

That deputy, Ben Fields, was fired and later convicted of several state charges, spending less than a year in jail before being released this summer on probation. Stines was not accused of trading favors for sex, and Mullins was not charged or accused of wrongdoing.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs in that case told The Courier Journal, part of the USA TODAY Network, they were surprised by the shooting and are not sure whether the case played a role in Thursday’s chaos.

“Everyone has different perspectives,” Josephine Richardson said.

Jackie Steele, Commonwealth’s Attorney for nearby Perry County and several other Eastern Kentucky jurisdictions, will take up the case alongside Attorney General Russell Coleman in place of the Letcher County Commonwealth’s Attorney. Butler called Steele “maybe the most competent prosecutor in the Commonwealth of Kentucky.”

Wood remains close to Stines’ family and saw his wife and daughter Friday. They’re a “good family,” she said, but right now, “they’re not good.”

In the meantime, Butler said in the video he posted, rumors can only complicate a situation that is getting more frenzied by the minute.

“This is not the time to gossip. This is not the time to trash people,” he told viewers. “We are going to do anything we can to help each other. We are going to be respectful of each other while we grieve, and we are going to do things to make our county safer and make sure this does not happen again.”

Trump, allies push to shore up key Nebraska electoral vote

Maya Marchel Hoff
USA TODAY

Former President Donald Trump is making a renewed effort to secure one of Nebraska's Electoral College votes which could decide who wins the White House in November.

The Republican nominee is speaking to Nebraska state legislators in a second attempt to usher a bill through the unicameral Legislature that would change the state's electoral vote allocation system and take away Vice President Kamala Harris' chance to win one of the state's five votes, according to the Nebraska Examiner and other outlets.

If successful, that gambit could alter the electoral map, forcing Harris to carry another state in order to win the presidency.

A purple dot in a sea of red

Nebraska and Maine are the only states that do not follow the winner-take-all system for electoral votes. In Nebraska, two of the five electoral votes are awarded to the candidate who wins the most votes statewide. The other three go to the winners of each of the state's three congressional districts.

Although Nebraska is a reliably Republican-leaning state, its 2nd Congressional District, which surrounds Omaha, has sometimes gone for Democrats in recent presidential elections, including to former President Barack Obama in 2008 and President Joe Biden in 2020.

That one electoral vote could be Harris' key to getting the 270 she needs to win: If she carries the "blue wall" battleground states of Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin she could win an Electoral College majority with the one vote from Nebraska. She would not need to carry any of the Sun Belt swing states such as Arizona, Georgia, Nevada and North Carolina.

Current polls show Harris tied or ahead in the "blue wall" states but trailing in some of the Sun Belt battlegrounds.

Some Nebraska Republicans have been trying to alter the system of splitting electoral votes by congressional district since it was approved by the Legislature in 1991, but the bills have either been vetoed by a Democratic governor or died in committee.

Nebraska's system drew national attention in April when conservatives from across the country, including Trump, urged Republican Gov. Jim Pillen to usher a bill through the Legislature to reinstate the state winner system. Although Republicans are in the majority and Pillen was supportive, the effort didn't have the 33 votes it needed to overcome a filibuster, but Pillen and other state Republicans are toying with idea of calling a special session to push it through if they can find the votes.

"I and other conservatives have worked diligently to assess legislative support for WTA (winner-take-all) in a pre-election special session," Pillen said in a statement last week.

"At this time, I have not yet received the concrete and public indication that 33 senators would vote for WTA," Pillen said. "If that changes, I will enthusiastically call a special session."

In an attempt to sway a handful of Republican state senators to back winner-take-all, South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham paid a visit to the Nebraska governor's mansion Wednesday in a closed-door meeting, according to The Washington Post.

"I want the law changed. I've made no qualms about it," Graham an enthusiastic Trump supporter, told the Post.

One key Nebraska legislator is Omaha Sen. Mike McDonnell, who changed his party affiliation from Democrat to Republican at the end of this year's legislative session, after he was censured by the state Democratic Party for supporting anti-abortion rights legislation. While he is now a part of the Legislature's Republican majority, he took a firm stance on not voting for winner-take-all legislation, which he reiterated last week.

Maine now out of the picture

The current push by Republicans to make Nebraska a winner-take-all state is different from last time because there is no longer the opportunity for Maine to make the same change – which could have neutralized the effect of Nebraska putting an additional electoral vote in Trump's column.

When the battle over Nebraska's electoral system was reignited in April, Maine House Majority Leader Maureen Terry, a Democrat, said if Nebraska acts on changing its system, Maine will do the same and take away an electoral vote from Trump that he won in 2020 when he carried one of the state's congressional districts. Now, Maine doesn't have the ability to change their electoral vote system because it takes 90 days for legislation to go into effect after it is enacted by the Maine Legislature, which would be too late for the Dec. 17 meeting of the Electoral College.

Young voters are registering in record numbers

Vote.org says it signed 150,000-plus in one day

USA TODAY

Voter registration is breaking records as Election Day approaches, particularly among young people, many of whom are first-time voters.

On Tuesday's National Voter Registration Day more than 150,000 people registered through Vote.org, the most the organization has ever seen on that day. The organization registered 279,400 voters in all of last year.

Last week, 337,826 people visited a link posted on Instagram by pop star Taylor Swift that directed them to their state's voter registration site.

Although Swift noted that she would be voting for the Democratic candidate, Vice President Kamala Harris, people don't have to declare a party affiliation when they register and neither vote.org nor Swift tracked registrations by party. Vote.org has told USA TODAY that about 80% of people they register turn out in the next election.

According to Vote.org, voters younger than 35 made up 81% of Tuesday's registrations, with the biggest spike among 18-year-olds. On this year's National Voter Registration Day, 11% of those registered were 18, which is 53% higher than on the same day four years ago.

"We're really seeing a surge in 18-year-olds registering to vote," Vote.org CEO Andrea Hailey said. "We know that we can onboard the next generation of voters into our democracy if we can get people to register and get out to these elections."

Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., also is trying to make it easier for people to register to vote.

After years of lobbying, she announced Friday that those filing out applications for health insurance through the HealthCare.Gov website would be offered an option to receive information on voter registration.

"The health of our democracy depends on Americans registering and exercising their right to vote," Warren said in a statement.

Many people looking for coverage through the website have low-wage jobs that don't offer insurance or are just coming off of their parents' insurance at age 26.

"I've pushed for the government to use every tool to make it easier to register, particularly for younger and lower-income individuals, and this update is an important action by the Biden-Harris administration to protect the right to vote for all Americans," Warren said.

Others are finding creative ways to register young voters, including Ezra Gershanok, whose New York City apartment subletting company, Ohana, is reaching younger people in a way that catches their attention: Memes.

He and others have been passing out flyers with a QR code that leads to a voter registration site.

His hope, he said, is to get young people new to the region to register to vote. "This past month, our website traffic hit 40,000 people per month, and a lot of them are these young people that are fresh out of college taking their first job in New York, or in this demographic of folks that don't often register to vote," he said.

"So we were like, 'could we make an impact in this election by just getting our own users to register to vote?'"

They hit 445 registrations this week and hope to register 10,000 young people by Election Day.

"I don't think this would resonate with people in their 40s or 50s, but it definitely resonates with young people," Gershanok said.

Israel, Hezbollah trade barrages in conflict; official cites 'new phase'

John Bacon and Maya Homan
USA TODAY

Israeli warplanes pounded Hezbollah positions in Lebanon on Sunday after some of the militant group's rockets targeted the northern Israeli city of Haifa and the Jezreel Valley, reaching deeper into Israel than any since the start of the war in Gaza almost a year ago.

About 150 rockets, cruise missiles and uncrewed aerial vehicles were launched toward Israel, the Israeli military said in a statement, adding that air defense systems "prevented significant damage." Israel closed schools, restricted gatherings in the north and ordered hospitals to move patients and staff to protected areas.

Israel has countered with some of the fiercest aerial assaults of the war.

"We have inflicted a series of blows on Hezbollah (more severe) than it ever imagined," Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said in a video statement. "If Hezbollah has not understood the message, I promise you, it will understand the message."

Israeli Defense Minister Yoav Gallant said his military hit almost 300 targets over the weekend and that the strikes would continue until it was safe for evacuated people in the north to return. Hezbollah has vowed to fight on until a cease-fire in the Israel-Hamas war.

Hezbollah Deputy Secretary-General Naim Qassem said at a funeral Sunday the militants were "ready to face all military possibilities" in battle with Israel, adding that his militants had entered a "new phase" of battle.

Israeli President Isaac Herzog on Sunday defended the deadly escalation in violence against Hezbollah, blaming the militant group's almost daily rocket attacks from across the Lebanese border for forcing 100,000 Israelis from their homes for months.

"Hezbollah has been attacking us on a daily basis, demolishing Israeli villages and towns," Herzog said on CBS' "Face the Nation." "Life has been shattered in our northern border. I don't think any American would have accepted it as a kind of a status quo situation in the United States."

Jeanine Hennis, the U.N. special coordinator for Lebanon, said the region was on the "brink of catastrophe" and warned both sides to seek a diplomatic settlement.

"It cannot be overstated enough: There is NO military solution that will make either side safer," she said on X.

Iranian Ambassador to Lebanon Mojtaba Amani, who was wounded Friday in Israeli bombings of Beirut, wrote on social media Sunday that his injury "is an honor for me, as I stand with the oppressed Lebanese people in this act of war."

The attack heightened tensions in the region that already were soaring.

Still, Herzog dismissed claims that Israel was trying to escalate the clash into a full-blown war, saying Israeli forces are hoping to reach a diplomatic agreement. He reiterated previous Israeli statements that leaders from Hezbollah and Hamas are refusing to engage.

"This is jihadism at its best, and that's what we are fighting," Herzog said.

Also Sunday, in the West Bank city of Ramallah, Qatari Al Jazeera TV aired live footage of Israeli forces storming into its bureau with a military order to close it for 45 days. Moments later, the broadcast was disrupted.

The Palestinian Journalists' Syndicate condemned the Israeli action as a "new violation against journalistic and media works, which has been exposing the occupation's crimes against the Palestinian people."

Don't use military families in shutdown fight

Marla Bautista
USA TODAY

Another year another potential government shutdown.

Political leaders continue to use military families like mine and others who rely on incomes from the federal government as negotiating tools in recurring acts of partisan theater.

The threat of a shutdown leaves service members and their families at increased risk of financial insecurity and weakens military readiness as pay, benefits, health care and other critical support systems are placed in jeopardy.

House Speaker Mike Johnson, R-La., and other Republican House members are now using the Safeguard American Voter Eligibility (SAVE) Act to hold the federal budget hostage. The legislation would require voters to prove they are U.S. citizens, even though noncitizens are not legally allowed to vote now.

If a compromise is not reached by the end of this month, much of the federal government will shut down on Oct. 1.

Military families suffer as paychecks are delayed

When a government shutdown occurs, military families are hurt in a variety of ways that add even more stress to an already challenging way of life.

Gold Star families, who lost a family member in war, suffer an interruption in death benefits. Paychecks for active-duty service members are delayed. And important health care procedures are delayed as well.

In January 2019, I remember packing a trailer full of food, diapers, hygiene items and gift cards to donate to Coast Guard families in upstate New York who were suffering from lost wages due to a government shutdown.

The shutdown began a few days before Christmas in 2018 and dragged on for 35 days. It was the longest government shutdown in U.S. history. Paychecks owed to more than 40,000 Coast Guard members were suspended. Families used their savings and emergency funds to stay afloat, and those without a financial safety net fell into despair.

Lapses in government funding have far-reaching effects that linger well after a shutdown ends. Military service members must continue working during a government shutdown even though they are not paid. Can you imagine not being paid, but still being required to show up, ready to work, with no guarantee of when you'll receive compensation?

The toll on service members compounds challenges with readiness and retention in the Department of Defense. In the 2018-19 shutdown, about 1.3 million active-duty personnel faced delayed payments.

"Many military families live paycheck-to-paycheck and rely solely on the service member's income," Monique Street, relationship manager with AAF-MAA Wealth Management & Trust, told me. "Delayed income can result in late fees, added interest and other financial complications that may have a ripple effect on their finances. Military families rely on a steady, predictable income, and with many working to recover from a summer (transfer), financial pressures can already be high."

Costs extend well beyond politics

Shutdowns often lead to the suspension of nonessential services that military families rely on. Commissaries, health clinics, child care facilities and other support services on military bases may close or limit operations.

During the 2013 shutdown, military commissaries across the United States were forced to close temporarily, causing a financial strain for families who relied on the commissary for affordable groceries.

From delayed paychecks to suspended services, the uncertainty compounds the unique challenges that service members and their families face.

As members of Congress debate the SAVE Act, military families are left vulnerable while their financial well-being is used as a gambit in negotiations on Capitol Hill. Please remember that the costs of a government shutdown extend well beyond politics, affecting people who already are making tremendous sacrifices for our nation and our national security.

Did your tax dollars fund the deadly pager attack?

Jeremy Mayer
Opinion contributor

Lebanon has been attacked by something the world has never seen before – a mass sabotage of electronic devices remotely detonated.

Tiny bombs inside pagers and walkie-talkies went off as the devices' users were in homes, supermarkets, buses and on the streets. At least 37 people, including two children, were killed and thousands wounded in two waves of attacks last week.

Lebanon's government and Hezbollah, an Iran-backed group that uses the nation as a base for its militants, both blamed Israel. Israel has not claimed responsibility for the attacks directly, but anyone who pays attention to the Middle East understands that this operation almost certainly originated in Tel Aviv.

On Friday, Israel launched an airstrike that killed senior Hezbollah commander Ibrahim Aqil in Beirut.

On Sunday, Israeli warplanes pounded Hezbollah positions in Lebanon after some of the militant group's rockets targeted the northern Israeli city of Haifa and the Jezreel Valley, reaching deeper into Israel than any since the start of the war in Gaza almost a year ago.

As an American, my tax dollars support Israel

War has always involved sabotage. But the morality and legality of sabotaging pagers is highly questionable. As is its wisdom. When you turn pagers into bombs, you have to know that there will be a high risk of collateral damage. The pagers belonged not just to military members of Hezbollah, but also medical staff and others.

In the past, when Israel targeted specific cellphone users, including killing a bomb maker working for Hamas, it seemed like a better way to respond to terrorism – with minimal risk of collateral civilian deaths, as compared with, say, a missile strike on an apartment.

This time, an entire nation, Lebanon, has been terrorized. Its medical facilities are straining to handle bomb victims. Some are comparing the feeling of insecurity to the awful aftermath of the 2020 Beirut dock explosion.

Relatives mourn on Wednesday a child killed after hundreds of paging devices exploded in a deadly wave across Lebanon. AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES Hezbollah is helping Hamas, and both groups kill Israeli civilians without mercy or regret. They kill Israeli children when they can. I have no illusions about their methods.

But I don't financially and politically support Hamas or Hezbollah. As an American, I financially support Israel with my tax dollars. If they are murdering Lebanese children, then to some extent, I did that.

And how, exactly, is this helping Israel? Is there a chance that Hezbollah goes, "We didn't realize how dangerous Israel was, let's negotiate"? The electronic attack has shaken the hornets' nest and killed a few terrorists, that's all.

Sure, Hezbollah's ability to communicate internally has been gravely damaged, at least momentarily. But this tactic is spurring anger at Israel across all sectors of Lebanese society, and indeed, the Arab world. Iraq is sending medical supplies to Lebanon; Egypt is expressing solidarity.

Will it be harder or easier for Hezbollah to get recruits? The pager and walkie-talkie explosions killed and wounded a few fighters, but there will be three or four replacements for each one who fell. Hezbollah has always been a terrible challenge for Israel. It's a non-state actor, with a military force far stronger than Lebanon's national army.

A few years ago, I asked a Lebanese government minister how a fight between Hezbollah and the Lebanese military would go, and he predicted that Hezbollah would win in a week.

Hezbollah also is funded by Iran, and gets more sophisticated weaponry every year. Compared with Hamas, Hezbollah has always been far more potent as a military force.

Attacks might hurt Israel in the long term

The long-term hope for Israel in its relationship with Lebanon has to be that Hezbollah is eventually brought under control of the political authorities in Beirut, and that a coalition of Sunni, Druze, Christian and moderate Shiite leaders makes peace with Israel.

That is the dream, but also the only realistic way the conflict between Hezbollah and Israel ends well.

The digital attack just pushed that day off by years. Is a massive sabotage of devices as bad as a Hamas bus bombing, which indiscriminately killed Israelis? No, but Israel should remember what happened when bus bombings left body parts all over the streets of Jerusalem and Tel Aviv.

The attacks devastated the Israeli left, the side that had been working for peace and even a two-state solution. They unified the nation around harder policies against Palestinians.

They strengthened Israel's will to fight.

That's what's happening in Lebanon, as even Hezbollah's fiercest opponents are now rallying to their support.

It also will inevitably cause more and more Americans to wonder if we should be such strong supporters of a nation that uses tactics that terrorize an entire country and inevitably leave behind dead and wounded children.

Cash, checks slowly disappear

More businesses turn to credit cards, electronic payments

Paul Dickson pulled out a $20 bill recently when he was at a baseball game at Camden Yards in Baltimore and wanted to buy a beer. • Another guy in line started laughing “because there’s no place in the ballpark where you can spend cash,” Dickson said. • Dickson, 85, who is an Orioles fan while his son and grandson are Nationals fans, paid for the $17.50 beer by credit card. He knew that the Nationals’ home stadium, Nationals Park, had become a cashless stadium, but he didn’t know other baseball stadiums, like Camden Yards also stopped accepting cash. • Dickson, a book author, is not opposed to using his credit card or other methods of payment. Before he moved to an independent living facility, he had most of his bills on auto pay from his checking account. He still writes a check occasionally and he’s had a PayPal account for years.

But Dickson said he’s offended that his choice to use cash where he wants is slowly becoming more limited.

“It’s not that I’m livid. It’s not some injustice, but it’s sort of this thing where I say ‘Wait, it’s my money. I’ll pay you however I want,’” said Dickson. “It’s almost like they’re (businesses) saying ‘Well, we’re removing an option, which is for our benefit.’”

Pricing airline tickets is complex

Several factors are involved in the process

USA TODAY

As an airline reporter, I often get asked for travel advice. One of the most enduring myths I hear about in these conversations is that it’s dangerous to repeatedly search for a flight – that somehow, by doing so, you’re going to tell the airline how interested you are in that flight. And the artificial intelligence revenue management gremlins are going to jack up the price just for you.

I’m here to tell you that’s not happening – at least not yet. Airline pricing is complex, and it’s very possible you’re paying something different than your seat neighbor, even if you book the same flight at the same time.

“It’s not hyperbolic to say on an aircraft with 100 seats there could easily, easily be 75 different fares,” William J. McGee, senior fellow for aviation and travel at the American Economic Liberties Project, told me.

However, airlines also don’t have such granular price control that a handful of searches by one person will result in a customized higher price.

“It’s not because you’re making a frequent search; it’s because you are delaying booking and getting closer to the departure date,” Ahmed Abdelghany, associate dean for research at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University’s David B. O’Maley College of Business told me.

Abdelghany said airlines’ pricing software would have to comb through a tremendous trove of data to recognize that a single user like you was looking for a flight more than once in the shopping process. Typically, he said, pricing decisions at airlines are influenced by much larger data samples. Abdelghany and McGee both agree, however, that airline pricing is opaque, and that airlines are exercising increasingly granular control over the prices potential passengers see.

How are airline tickets priced?

As with most things in air travel, it’s complicated.

“Several factors determine the price that you might see when you’re searching for an itinerary,” Abdelghany said. “When are you traveling? How early are you booking your ticket? This is an important variable. If you tend to buy at the last minute, the airline may classify the booking request to be coming from a business traveler instead of a leisure traveler. Typically, leisure travelers tend to book far in advance.”

Survey: Shoppers on edge about holiday spending

More consumers starting before Halloween season

Betty Lin-Fisher
USA TODAY

Tara Bruckner has already started her holiday shopping.

Bruckner, who usually likes to start her holiday shopping by October and finish by Thanksgiving, started even earlier this year, buying a few things for her two kids and her mom.

“During school shopping back in July, I ‘took note’ of some items... and ordered them online in August when they were on sale,” Bruckner, who lives in Chilton, Wisconsin, told USA TODAY. She is not alone.

More consumers are starting their holiday shopping early this year but are still on edge about rising costs and their budgets, a new survey has found.

In a study released last week, Gartner Inc. said 32% of consumers say they were going to do their holiday shopping between July and October. A Bankrate study this month said 48% of shoppers were planning to begin their holiday shopping by Halloween.

But costs are on their mind.

More than half of shoppers aren’t planning to spend more this year

“The effects of high inflation and supply chain issues in the post-pandemic economy mean holiday shoppers are still on edge,” Kassi Socha, director analyst in the Gartner Marketing Practice, said in a news release.

Of the consumers surveyed, 64% said they are planning to maintain their holiday spending this year and 21% are pulling back.

For those who plan to spend more, “it’s due to the increased costs the increased costs of gifts as the main reason, not having incremental discretionary spending, Sochi told USA TODAY in an email.

Bruckner buys holiday gifts for more than 20 people, including family, extended family, co-workers and families in need. She spends about $3,000 a year on holiday gifts and plans to spend about the same this year.

She is concerned about prices being higher due to inflation and said there may be fewer presents this year.

Bruckner said by spreading out her holiday shopping and being done by Thanksgiving, she spreads out the hit to her wallet, too.

She shops a lot of small businesses for “heart-felt items” but also shops the major retailers. She used to shop at midnight on Black Friday and “that was fun and crazy.”

But “it seems like deals get released earlier and earlier each year,” she said. “I like when the deals are spread out for big-ticket items like electronics. It allows for my pocketbook to catch up when I shop early.”

Cash

Stanley, a senior policy analyst with the Speech, Privacy, and Technology Project with the American Civil Liberties Union.

Cash is not king

More businesses became cashless during the COVID-19 pandemic, citing the need to protect their workers' health by not requiring them to exchange paper money and coins with the public, said Bankrate Senior Industry Analyst Ted Rossman. But some businesses were already moving in that direction, saying a no-cash policy was more efficient for operations.

"Speed and convenience tend to be the main explanations, especially with most stadiums that have gone cashless," said Rossman. Businesses "typically do it under the guise of 'Oh, this is going to be faster for everybody, the staff is not going to have to count bills and coins and you can just kind of speed the line through.'"

Cash also is costly to businesses, Rossman said. Employees need time to balance cash registers at the end of a shift and there are costs associated with the business getting the cash to the bank, either via an employee or an armored vehicle service, he said.

Businesses handling cash also have the added potential worry of robberies, either by outside criminals or employees who steal, Rossman said.

Some businesses also are rejecting payments by check. Target became the latest retailer to stop accepting checks in its stores on July 15, citing low usage. Aldi and Whole Foods also do not take checks.

Cash has its benefits

But cash remains an important option for consumers, some advocates say.

"Cash is needed for choice, for privacy, for equity and for access," said Ruth Susswein, director of consumer protection for Consumer Action, a national education and advocacy organization.

Susswein was recently in Atlanta and saw a sign on an ice cream shop. It read: "We accept whoever you are, but we don't accept cash."

Consumers should be "allowed to decide how we want to pay," Susswein said.

Use of cash, checks is declining

The use of cash and personal checks has dropped in recent years while credit and debit card payments rose, according to the latest 2024 Diary of Consumer Payment Choice, put out yearly by the Federal Reserve Financial Services FedCash Services.

Among the study's findings:

- Cash was most used by consumers for in-person shopping. It also is the preferred payment method of consumers in low-income households and those 55 years old or older.

- Consumers younger than age 55 used cash for just 12% of payments in 2023, compared with 22% for those age 55 and older. Also, for the first time in the Diary's history, cash was not the most-used instrument for smaller-value payments of $25 or less.

- Cash carried in a consumer's pocket, purse, or wallet averaged $74, compared with $60 before the pandemic.

- Consumers living in households with income of less than $50,000 a year used cash for 28% of payments, compared with 13% for households with annual income of more than $50,000.

- Use of personal checks declined to 3% of payments made in 2023, down from 4% in 2021 and 2022, and 7% in 2020. Automated Clearing House (ACH) payments, or electronic check payments, accounted for 13% of payments.

The study, conducted in October 2023, was the first one since the Centers for Disease Control declared the end of the COVID-19 emergency in May 2023 – a period when some consumers got increasingly used to digital and on-line payments while hunkered down at home and paying for goods and services remotely.

Results of the study, its authors said, "indicate that the pandemic had lasting effects on how consumers made payments."

Kennedy Ream, 23, from Indiana, said she used to use cash a lot more when she was a teenager. But for the last four years, she has been using her credit cards.

"I don't take time out of my day to go to the bank to take cash out," she said.

Tony Brunner of Virginia said it's so much easier to use credit cards and digital apps, and he doesn't have to go to the bank.

"I'm on board with the digital economy," Brunner said, who uses his phone and Google wallet for most payments.

The rise of plastic

Since the 2016 Federal Reserve Diary of Consumer Payment Choice, credit card payments have nearly doubled, increasing from eight payments in 2016 to 15 payments in 2023. Cash payments have decreased 50% over the same period, declining from 14 payments in 2016 to seven in 2023.

Increased debit and credit card use between 2022 and 2023 resulted in more than 60% of payments being made with credit (32%) and debit cards (30%).

Is a business required to accept cash?

Despite the printed words on money, which say "this note is legal tender for all debts, public and private," businesses are not required by law to accept cash, according to the Federal Reserve.

"There is no federal statute mandating that a private business, a person, or an organization must accept currency or coins as payment for goods or services," the Federal Reserve says on its website. "Private businesses are free to develop their own policies on whether to accept cash unless there is a state law that says otherwise."

Jay Zagorsky, an economist and associate clinical professor at Boston University's Questrom School of Business, explains it further: the key word is "debt." If a business notifies you ahead of time that it does not accept cash, then you haven't gone into a debt, he said.

For instance, many airlines have gone cashless for any purchases during a flight, requiring a credit or debit card. If you only have cash, they won't sell you a beer and there won't be a debt, said Zagorsky. Similarly, if a gas station says it doesn't accept cash, you don't pump the fuel, so you don't have a debt, he said.

"There's no debt incurred, so they can actually quite legally say sorry" no cash, said Zagorsky, who has a forthcoming book called "The Power of Cash: Why Using Paper Money is Good for You and Society."

Some businesses remain cash only

And yet, there are also businesses that only want payments in cash.

In recent weeks, Dickson says, he's gone to his favorite pizza place near his home in Kensington, Maryland, and his barber. Neither will take a credit card – only cash – or a check, though they prefer the former.

In some areas, businesses are legally required to take paper money or have been pushed to do so by customer demand.

Sweetgreen, a national salad chain, reversed its cashless policy in 2019 and again began accepting paper money after customer backlash. Meanwhile, several states, including Massachusetts and Colorado, and cities, like New York, Philadelphia and Detroit have passed laws banning businesses from going cashless, and many others are considering similar legislation.

Some of the laws have exceptions, such as allowing large stadiums to go cashless or having requirements for a reverse ATM to convert cash to a prepaid debit card. Businesses that violate but now report a variety of reasons for their concern, including higher prices (40%), inventory (28%), selection issues (18%) and security concerns (14%), the study said.

"When shopping, consumers are prioritizing price, promotion and free shipping in that order when determining what to buy," Socha told USA TODAY.

Retail sales are expected to see a moderate increase this year despite inflation, according to Deloitte's 2024 Holiday Forecast.

Holiday retail sales are likely to increase between 2.3% and 3.3% this year, the September study said. That compares to a 4.3% increase in retail sales the cash ban laws can face fines. And some of those reverse ATMs can come with fees, Rossman said.

Lawmakers said the requirement was put in place to protect consumers' rights to use cash.

And advocates emphasize that cash continues to serve a vital purpose, from being the only means many Americans have to pay their bills, to being a critical backup when electronic systems are down after a natural disaster.

Credit cards can cost extra

The increase in credit card usage and businesses who raise all prices to cover credit card fees is hurtful to all consumers, said Stanley.

Instead, it's more equitable to have the individual customer using a credit card pay the accompanying fee, Stanley said.

Cash helps consumers budget, spend less

Paying with cash can also help consumers save, said Zagorsky.

"Using cash helps people spend a lot less money," said Zagorsky. It's called the pain of paying, he said. When people have to give up cash at the register, it hurts a bit, while swiping the credit card isn't as tangible, he said.

An example Zagorsky gives: he recently went into a liquor store to pick out a $35 bottle of wine he knew he wanted for a dinner party. But he realized he didn't have enough cash when he walked into the store.

"I walked out with five bottles of wine and I spent $150," said Zagorsky, who used his credit card. "Because I was no longer suddenly constrained, I was like 'Oh, that looks interesting. How about this one?'"

Lack of cash payment options hurts poor, unbanked

Limiting where people can spend cash causes disparities and difficulties for consumers in lower income brackets, many of whom may not have access to a bank account, and who are disproportionately from marginalized communities, said Stanley.

"Going cashless is bad for privacy. It's bad for low-income people. It's disproportionately bad for people of color, it's bad for homeless people and the undocumented," he said.

Low-income people, and consumers who don't have a good credit score and then don't have access to a credit or debit card, are most affected by businesses that don't accept cash, agreed Susswein with Consumer Action.

"Those folks have limited or no way to do business with retailers that don't accept cash," she said.

That may be forcing those consumers to go to check cashers who charge high fees or potentially to some underground economy, Susswein said.

People of color disproportionately are underbanked, meaning they may not have an account to tap for an electronic payment or that allows them to have a credit or debit card, said Stanley, who wrote an ACLU piece in 2019 entitled "Say No to the Cashless Future and Cashless Stores."

Are we moving to a cashless or checkless society?

Zagorsky and Stanley don't think we're moving to a cashless or checkless society, "but this is a very slippery slope," said Zagorsky.

Refusing to accept checks reduces the risk of check fraud, Zagorsky said, which is a plus. Many businesses also accept automated payments via a checking account. But, moving to a cashless society would leave out millions of Americans who lack access to credit cards and electronic payments or simply prefer to use cash.

"We're not saying we think you should pay with cash for everything," said Stanley. "We're saying that we should preserve the option of cash for people, even if that involves some expenses and some inefficiencies."

As a result, airfare purchased well in advance is often cheaper because airlines know leisure travelers are more price-sensitive.

Abdelghany said the days of the week you travel on – for example, whether or not you have a Saturday stay in your destination – can also provide a clue as to the purpose of your trip and may influence pricing.

Are airfare prices personalized?

Airlines don't yet show totally different prices to different travelers based on their personal profiles – that much is demonstrated by the fact that pretty much everyone sees the same airfare if they search for the same itinerary at the same time – but McGee and Abdelghany both said the industry seems to be moving in that direction, especially as airlines roll out new technologies that allow for customization of ads and other offers through a passenger's frequent flyer profile.

"In my view, this is only going to get worse because the technology keeps getting better and the process keeps getting more and more opaque," McGee said "(Airfare is) going to be customized upward in many ways. In four years, it might be too late. Everybody might have their own price."

As an aviation adviser at Consumer Reports, McGee oversaw a study of airfares in 2016 that compared prices being quoted on multiple travel platforms on simultaneous searches for the same itinerary. It tested variables including whether or not browser cookies made a difference and found that there was some inconsistent pricing between users even when the exact same searches were happening at the same time.

It's seemingly the most recent comprehensive study of the effects of search volume on airfares, and even eight years later, McGee said the results stuck with him.

"There's no question in my mind that fares currently are being tailored in some way for some users," he said.

Abdelghany pointed out, however, that airlines' opaque pricing structure likely plays a role in inconsistent and unpredictable pricing.

"You made a search yesterday and now you made a search today, you are getting closer to the departure date," he said. "Getting closer to the departure date might have some consequences on the price."

It's also why airfares often spike during periods of intense demand.

Airlines, Abdelghany said, can see when there's a true demand spike much better than a few one-off searches.

"It's not because of the searches, it's because of the booking that already happened," Abdelghany told me. "The airlines will treat this as a premium flight because of strong demand."

How can you get the best deal on airfare?

Proving that it's really a myth that too many airfare searches bump up the price, the experts told me the best way to get a good deal on airfares is still to do your shopping.

"After 20 years, like I said, the motto is still the same: you have to shop around," McGee said.

As with most things in air travel, it's complicated. GETTY IMAGES

Customers are cost-conscious

The study also found that consumers are concerned that in-store prices are not competitive with online prices, with 20% of consumers planning to increase their online shopping behavior this year.

Sixty percent of consumers have at least one concern about shopping in-store this holiday season, the study found. Shoppers showed interest in returning to in-store shopping last year, last year.

Consumers are starting their holiday shopping already

This month, Bankrate reported in a survey that 48% of holiday shoppers said they were planning to begin their buying by Halloween.

Walmart on Wednesday announced its Holiday Deals days coming in October and said it was launching its holiday savings early since consumers are shopping earlier for the holidays.

It followed Amazon's announcement for its second Prime Days, called Prime Big Deal Days, which are also in October.

The Walmart days coincide with – and are longer – than Amazon's days.

Retailers are responding to demand by consumers who have been starting their holiday shopping earlier, fueled by special retailer events such as Amazon Prime Days, Target Circle Week, and Walmart's Holiday Deals, Ted Rossman, Bankrate senior industry analyst, told USA TODAY for a previous story on holiday shopping.

"About 1 in 8 early birds have already started, and about one in eight are planning to start sometime this month. October, in particular, has become the unofficial holiday kickoff," Rossman told USA TODAY this month.

Home buyers hope rate cuts help housing

30-year fixed-rate mortgage touches 6.09%

Andrea Riquier
USA TODAY

Katherine Hare and her husband, Stephen Boyd, are retirees looking to make a move. The couple have lived in the Chapel Hill area of North Carolina, where Boyd grew up, for many years. But now, Hare wants to be closer to her family in the West Hartford area of Connecticut.

With plenty of equity built up in their home, located in a booming local economy, the couple is in a position many Americans would envy: They likely won't need to take out a mortgage on a new property. The biggest challenge, Hare thinks, will be the long-distance house-hunting.

Still, she's well aware that the recent decline in borrowing costs will be helpful when the couple goes to sell their own home. The 30-year fixed-rate mortgage just touched 6.09%, its lowest level in over 18 months, down sharply from the recent peak of 7.79%.

"Lower mortgage rates will definitely help," Hare said. "It will open up the market for us. When rates were lower, things were really, really cranking around here."

What is holding back the housing market?

Mortgage rates don't dictate the housing market – until they do. Ask any real estate agent why buyers aren't buying, and most will say it's the lack of inventory. But most housing-market inventory is simply houses that other people want to sell, and with nearly 90% of all Americans with a mortgage enjoying a rate below 6%, there's no reason to move unless absolutely necessary. With new listings scarce, the few properties that are on the market get snatched up quickly, and prices keep getting bid higher.

That means the housing market looks a lot like the situation Hare and Boyd are about to encounter. The Federal Reserve cut interest rates by half a point Wednesday, and mortgage rates are likely to move in tandem as the central bank continues to ease.

Yes, prices may tick up as demand increases. Still, most observers think the entire housing ecosystem, not just those applying for a mortgage, will benefit from the "unlocking" effect. Many are hoping for a much healthier market after a few years of boom and bust.

"It's market whiplash," said Rick Sharga, CEO of CJ Patrick Company, a real estate consultancy. "We had a zero-interest rate policy for a few years to help with the unknowns of COVID. That pulled demand forward and made homes relatively affordable even though prices rose. Right now, affordability is at all-time lows, except for a period of the 1980s, so anything that will lower rates will be a boon."

On Thursday, the National Association of Realtors said that sales of previously owned homes fell 2.5% in August. At an annual pace of 3.86 million, sales are running roughly where they were at the depths of the foreclosure crisis a decade ago.

"Home sales were disappointing again in August, but the recent development of lower mortgage rates coupled with increasing inventory is a powerful combination that will provide the environment for sales to move higher in future months," the group's chief economist said in a statement.

Time to get off the sidelines?

Still, there are some green shoots in the market. In August, homebuilders started construction on more homes and applied for more permits for future projects than in previous months. That will help bring much-needed inventory to the market. More people applied for mortgages to purchase homes last week, the Mortgage Bankers Association said Wednesday, suggesting many Americans are looking for an opportunity to get off the sidelines.

Airline lounges offer a way to relax on the ground before your plane takes flight.

Priority Pass program opens up lounge access

USA TODAY

With airports more crowded than ever, it can be hard to find a respite in the concourse. Seats near power outlets are often in high demand, and busy bathrooms aren't always the most pleasant place to take care of business.

For many frequent travelers, lounge access solves those issues by opening up secluded places in the airport that are often (though not always) less crowded than the main concourse and come with amenities like free food and nicer bathrooms.

In the beginning, lounges were the invitation-only properties of airlines, but access has been expanding over the decades.

Now, many top-tier travel credit cards include lounge access as a perk, even for nonelite frequent flyers.

But that's not the only way to get behind the frosted glass doors.

Priority Pass is a program that travelers can subscribe to if they want to get into lounges around the world without signing up for a credit card with a high annual fee.

Many of those credit cards include Priority Pass membership, but travelers can also join independently.

What is Priority Pass?

Priority Pass is a subscription service that gets travelers access to lounges around the world and other perks including spa services, airport restaurant credits, concierge services and other amenities.

How much does Priority Pass cost?

Priority Pass has three membership tiers:

- Standard, which costs $99 annually. With the Standard package, members still have to pay $35 per lounge visit and $35 to bring in a guest.

- Standard Plus, which costs $329 annually. With the Standard Plus package, members are entitled to 10 free lounge visits per year, and then get charged $35 for each additional visit. Guest visits also cost $35 with this package.

- Prestige, which costs $469 annually. With this package, all lounge visits are free for the member and guest passes cost $35.

How many lounges are in the Priority Pass network?

According to Priority Pass, it has more than 1,600 lounges in its global network, including more than 150 in North America and more than 370 in Europe.

What other benefits do Priority Pass members get?

Some of the other Priority Pass perks include:

- Restaurant credits.
- Credits toward spa treatments.
- Video game lounge access.
- Ground transportation deals.
- Preferred car rental rates.
- Airport concierge service.
- Access to shared workspaces.

'College coach' can ease search pain for families

Some companies offer service in benefit plans

Medora Lee
USA TODAY

When Jenny Rosenberger's high school junior wanted to start looking at colleges in 2020, she didn't even know where to begin.

Not only were they at home in Newark, Delaware, in the middle of a global pandemic that put many college-related activities on hold, but Rosenberger said: "I had no previous experience with the college application process. I went to community college after high school and then started working ... before I finished my studies."

They needed help.

That's when the senior vice president for Bank of America remembered seeing a new employee benefit launched in early 2020 for a "college coach."

With nothing to lose, Rosenberger gave it a try.

The service helped her daughter, Kaydria Boyer, narrow down her list of schools to consider, refine her essays, meet deadlines, and complete financial aid and other scholarship forms to pay for college.

The result? Nearly every school Boyer applied to accepted her.

"She even got multiple scholarships we didn't even know we could get," Rosenberger said.

Isn't college coaching what school counselors do?

Yes, school college counselors guide families through the admissions process, but they're often overwhelmed.

The national student-to-counselor ratio dropped to 385-to-1 in the 2022-23 academic year, the first time since 1986 it has dropped below 400-to-1, but it's still above the 250-to-1 recommended ratio, said the American School Counselor Association.

Students end up with a "variety of experiences," said Brock Jolly, financial adviser and founder of The College Funding Coach, which helps families plan to pay for college.

"Some kids may not get scheduled in a timely fashion and some may get a computer and be told to figure out where they want to go to school and get back to me."

Combined with the increasingly competitive and complex college landscape and soaring costs, many families seek more individualized, private college coaching, experts said.

College coaches are usually former college admissions and financial aid officers, those who've worked with them say.

How much does a personal college coach cost?

In 2023, the average hourly rate for private college counseling was $212, up 7% from 2022, according to College-PlannerPro, which designs software independent college coaches use.

The average package price for college counseling was $5,255, up 9% from 2022.

Costs increase, on average, with the years of experience the counselor has, it said.

Companies lend a hand

Recognizing additional help can lower stress levels for both students and working parents, more companies are offering their employees college coaches as a free perk, experts said.

Recognizing additional help can lower stress levels for both students and working parents, more companies are offering their employees college coaches as a free perk, experts said.

Amazon, Starbucks, JPMorgan Chase, American Express, Morgan Stanley, Paramount Pictures, and Johnson & Johnson are among companies offering this benefit.

Bright Horizons College Coach, which partners with companies to offer this benefit, said the number of employers who offered its program more than tripled over the past 10 years.

Bank of America, where Rosenberger works, offers counseling geared toward students from 8th through 12th grades, said Brandt Bennett, the bank's global human resources executive.

Coaches help younger students choose courses – from advanced placement and honors classes – and extracurricular activities that will help them build their college résumés, he said.

As students enter their junior year in high school, guidance focuses more on choosing schools, completing applications, writing essays, and paying for school.

"Whether parents have been to college or not, things have changed," Bennett said.

"Think about that stress level. You're managing day to day and trying to understand the overall college application process.

"We provide help, an advocate to help navigate the application process and financial aid to alleviate that stress and help (families) enjoy the process.

"It should be an extremely exciting time."

Broadening horizons, strengthening relationships and finances

Thoughtful planning with a coach can help families choose a school that suits their kid and budget, and hopefully reduce the need for student loans.

"We would have stayed here and not explored beyond the tristate area," she said. "I would have been concerned about (affording) an out-of-state school but learned they would offer more money in scholarships."

Louisiana State University, where Boyer ended up enrolling, turned out cheaper, even with room and board, than the University of Delaware, she said.

Over the past four years, Bright Horizons College Coach said it's helped families negotiate for an additional $1 million in scholarship funding.

Families and employers also benefit in other ways.

Bright Horizons College Coach surveys of approximately 1,000 employees who used its coaching benefit through their employer showed:

- Improved work/life balance (81%).
- Reduced stress (87%).
- Increased job productivity (72%).
- Increased commitment to their employer (80%).

And though this isn't a scientific poll, Rosenberger said she thinks the college coach improves the relationship between parents and children.

"Teenagers think parents don't know anything, but a third party could steer her (daughter)," she said.

"I think our relationship improved."

In 28 years of the WNBA, no player had led the league in points, rebounds and blocks in the same season.

A'ja Wilson changed that in 2024, as the Las Vegas Aces forward totaled a league-best 1,021 points, 451 rebounds and 98 blocks in a sensational display of dominance all season that has led to the 28-year-old winning her third MVP Award – this time unanimously – as announced by the league Sunday.

Wilson received all 67 first-place votes. Napheesa Collier of the Minnesota Lynx got 66 of the 67 second-place votes. They were followed by Breanna Stewart (295 points), Caitlin Clark (130 points) and Alyssa Thomas (83 points).

Before Wilson, only one other MVP in league history had earned every top vote: In 1997 Cynthia Cooper was the No. 1 selection on 37 ballots.

The award is the latest addition to a sparkling resume for Wilson, who led the American women to an unprecedented eighth consecutive Olympic gold medal in basketball in August at the Paris Summer Games. Widely considered the best player in the world at both ends of the floor, Wilson was named MVP of the Paris Olympic tournament, too.

Only three other players in WNBA history – Sheryl Swoopes, Lauren Jackson and Lisa Leslie – have won three MVP awards.

On Sept. 15, Wilson became the first player in WNBA history to score a thousand points in a season.

Earlier this year, she set a record when she became the first player to score at least 20 points and grab at least 10 rebounds in eight consecutive games.

Despite playing a career-high 34.4 minutes per game this season, Wilson is having a career year, turning in highs in points per game (26.9), rebounds per game (9.8) and steals per game (1.8). She finished the regular season with the highest scoring average in league history at 26.87, easily surpassing the record of 25.29 set by Diana Taurasi in 2006.

Wilson is the defending defensive player of the year – an award she's expected to contend for this season, too – and finished third in MVP voting last year. She was MVP in 2020 and 2022 and led the Aces to back-to-back WNBA titles the last two seasons.

The Aces entered the 2024 playoffs Sunday as the No. 4 seed against the fifth-seeded Seattle Storm. Las Vegas is trying to become the first team since the Houston Comets to win three consecutive titles (Houston won four championships from 1997 to 2000).

This marks the first time since 2015 that the league MVP did not come from a top-three team. That year, Elena Delle Donne took home MVP honors despite the Washington Mystics finishing fourth in the Eastern Conference. Delle Donne averaged 23.4 points, 8.4 rebounds and 2.0 blocks that season.

Trojans fumble away Big Ten start

Michigan pounds ball to defeat USC

Paul Myerberg
USA TODAY

It seemed for most of the second half in the Big House that Southern Cal was ready for life in the Big Ten.

That may still be the case: Down 14-3 at the break and with nothing working offensively, the Trojans flipped the script in the second half Saturday against Michigan and were a late defensive stand away from kicking off life in the new conference on a very high note.

But the Wolverines scored on a 1-yard run by Kaleb Mullings with 36 seconds left and pulled out a 27-24 victory that keeps the defending national champions in the College Football Playoff mix and leaves USC and coach Lincoln Riley frustrated over a win that got away.

There are things to like about the Trojans' Big Ten debut. For one, the shift in physicality and production on both lines in the second half suggests USC is ready for the style of play in this conference.

Meanwhile, the Trojans were able to augment this running attack with a solid game from quarterback Miller Moss, who was pressured and under duress from the Wolverines' pass rush but finished with 283 passing yards and three touchdowns. On the other side of the field, Michigan got nothing from quarterback Alex Orji. Making his starting debut, he had 32 passing yards and 43 yards on the ground.

After reeling in new defensive coordinator D'Anton Lynn from rival UCLA this winter, the Trojans are also seeing

Home-field advantage in MLB playoffs bit overrated

Bob Nightengale

USA TODAY

PHOENIX – You're the Arizona Diamondbacks, the defending National League champions, and you've got a huge decision looming on your hands.

You're facing the San Diego Padres the final weekend of the regular season at Chase Field in Phoenix. If you win the three-game series, you'll likely open the postseason at home against these Padres. Lose the series, and you'll likely open in San Diego.

So, just how do you play it?

Do you go all-in and use top starters in Zac Gallen or Merrill Kelly, or do you make sure they're fresh for the playoffs?

Do you exercise caution or are you aggressive with the bullpen?

Just how important is it to win the series and secure home-field advantage in the best-of-three wild-card round?

The New York Yankees will face a

The Rangers went 11-0 on the road in the 2023 playoffs, including three games at Chase Field in Phoenix to win the World Series. ROB SCHUMACHER/USA TODAY NETWORK similar dilemma. How hard will they go this week against Baltimore and Pittsburgh to ensure they have home-field advantage throughout the American League playoffs, if not the World Series?

If you're the Los Angeles Dodgers with a depleted starting rotation, how important is it to keep the foot on the gas to make sure you have a better record than the Philadelphia Phillies in case they meet in the NL championship series?

Well, if these teams step inside their analytics room, they may discover they're wasting their time and energy if they really believe home-field advantage is worth fighting for, except for providing a few extra bucks in their owners' pockets.

"If there's anybody to tell you that home-field advantage is overrated," three-time Cy Young winner Max Scherzer of the Texas Rangers tells USA TODAY Sports, "I'm your guy. Really, it's almost the opposite."

Trust him. Scherzer was on the 2019 Washington Nationals team that lost every home game during the World Series and still won it all by winning four games against the Astros in Houston.

Scherzer was also on the Texas team that lost all three games at home during the ALCS last year but won four games in Houston to reach the World Series, with the Rangers winning their first championship by going a record 11-0 on the road.

"Baseball is a team sport, but there's a very individual component to it," Scherzer says. "You're not relying on necessary communication like other sports where crowd noise affects that.

The field conditions are the same, too. Because of that, baseball is played the same way, whether you're home or road.

"So, this home-field advantage hasn't made a bit of a difference in my experience."

Go ahead, take a good hard look at the numbers.

The home team in last year's post-season went 15-26 (.366), the worst in 53 years, dating to 1970 when there were four teams in a postseason (4-7, .364).

In the last five full years, excluding the 2020 postseason when games were played at neutral sites, more series were won on the road (27) than at home (22).

Even when the pressure is the greatest, and the stakes are the highest, home teams were 6-10 in winner-take-all games since 2018.

"I can't explain it," says Rangers manager Bruce Bochy, who has won four World Series titles in his career, never clinching at home. "We didn't just lose, we got pummeled at home last year against the Astros. We go to their place and play lights out. I looked back and tried to make sense of it, but I couldn't. Last year wasn't an advantage for any team."

Times are different now, negating home-field advantage in the post-season. It's not like the days of the 1987 and 1991 World Series when the Minnesota Twins won every home game at the old Metrodome and lost every road game, leaving opposing managers like Whitey Herzog of the St. Louis Cardinals convinced the Twins were cheating by adjusting their air conditioning system.

It's not like the days in Detroit when the infield grass was so thick that it slowed the ball down. Or the days of the cold, dark visiting clubhouse in Arlington, Texas, where you struggled trying to stay warm inside and then felt like it was 140 degrees when you stepped outside. Or the chilly nights at old Candlestick Park in San Francisco where the Giants had portable space heaters for their dugout and the visiting team had to fend for itself.

Life on the road is so comfortable nowadays that it can feel like a spa day.

"The one thing about being on the road is that it's just you," Bochy says.

Braves pitcher Chris Sale not only leads MLB in wins, ERA and strikeouts, but he hasn't permitted more than two earned runs in any his past 18 starts, dating to June 7.

JORDAN GODFREE/IMAGN IMAGES

"There's less distractions. You're all in the same hotel together. You're hunkering down as a group. So maybe that does play a role.

"When you're at home, you're going your own way, and nobody sees each other until you get to the park."

The Diamondbacks, who have won more games on the road (44-35) than at home (42-33) this season, insist that winning home-field advantage is important to them. They even have a glossy postseason road resume, starting every playoff series on the road last year and going 7-3 in Milwaukee, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Texas.

Still, they're not changing their minds.

"You want home-field advantage," Diamondbacks first baseman Christian Walker says. "It's not about scaring the visiting team or anything like that, it just makes you feel more comfortable. When we walked into Philly last year, we weren't nervous or intimidated at all, but when we came home and had 48,000 people cheering for us, it gives you a little energy.

"But really, just get in, and it really doesn't matter where you play.

"I think history has proven that." Again and again.

"I know it's nice being at home," Scherzer says, "but speaking from personal experience, the road can be a beautiful place."

Around the bases

- MLB and the Oakland Athletics are beefing up stadium security for the final game at Oakland Coliseum on Thursday with players and staff instructed not to loiter on the field after the game in case of fan violence. Manager Mark Kotsay, who had planned to thank the crowd after the game, was advised to instead retreat to the clubhouse, according to one of his peers.

- If the Giants dismiss Farhan Zaidi, president of baseball operations, at the season's conclusion, look for them to reach out to former Miami Marlins GM Kim Ng and Twins GM Thad Levine as potential replacements. The Giants have missed the postseason in all but two years since winning the 2014 World Series.

- Billy Eppler, the former New York Mets GM who was suspended from MLB for fabricating injuries to place players on the injured list to open roster spots, will officially be reinstated after the World Series.

Eppler, who was GM of the Los Angeles Angels when they landed Shohei Ohtani and has strong ties in Japan, could be a shrewd hire for a team making a run at Roki Sasaki, Japan's most talented pitcher who has teams drooling.

"He is a healthy Jacob deGrom," one executive said, "only better. He might have the best stuff I've ever seen."

It remains unknown whether Sasaki will leave Japan this winter or wait one more year. debate sure ended quickly. Ohtani will run away and perhaps win his third unanimous MVP award.

- Twins outfielder Manny Margot quietly broke an MLB record. He is now 0-for-30 as a pinch hitter this season.

- How great is the Cleveland Guardians bullpen with sensational closer Emanuel Clase? They have lost only two games when leading after six innings and will be a serious threat in the AL playoffs.

- Just how great of a season is Chris Sale having for Atlanta en route to his unanimous NL Cy Young Award? He not only leads MLB in wins, ERA and strikeouts, but he hasn't permitted more than two earned runs in any his past 18 starts, dating to June 7. It's the longest single-season stretch by a full-time starter since earned runs became an official statistic in 1913.

- This could be the second time in the past 25 years that only two AL teams finish with 90 or more victories. The AL has had three or more teams win at least 90 games every year since 1998 with the exception of 2015 when the Kansas City Royals won 95 games (and the World Series) and the Toronto Blue Jays won 93.

- It seems almost mathematically impossible, but Red Sox outfielder Tyler O'Neill somehow leads the team with 31 home runs but has only 61 RBIs. He will join Felix Mantilla in 1964 (30 homers, 64 RBIs) as the only Red Sox players to hit 30 or more homers and drive in fewer than 80 runs. O'Neill has hit 20 solo homers this year.

- If the Seattle Mariners are sitting home this winter, they can blame two of the strangest base-running blunders you'll ever see on their downfall.

Mariners outfielder Victor Robles actually tried to steal home on a 3-0 count with the bases loaded on a pitcher in the first inning and was easily thrown out against the Yankees.

And Mariners outfielder Julio Rodriguez tried to top the boneheaded move one night later by getting picked off third base with one out in the 10th inning. He was scrambling out of the way when Randy Arozarena's bat slipped out of his hand toward him but forgot the play was still live and was easily thrown out.

"That's one I've never seen," Yankees manager Aaron Boone said, "and I don't know if I'll ever see it again."

The two blunders will live forever in Mariners' lore, failing to make the postseason for the 22nd time in 23 years.

- The Padres are so much more of a complete team than they were a year ago with their abundance of stars.

When they were down in games last year, their team seemed to quit. When they are down this year, they fight back:

They are 10-1 in extra-inning games, compared to 2-12 of a year ago.

They are 31-22 in games in they've lost a lead, compared to 8-33 a year ago.

They are 22-18 in one-run games compared to 9-23 a year ago.

"It's just a hungry group that loves to play baseball," Padres manager Mike Shildt says, "and loves to compete."

the sort of improved results that could keep this team in the mix for an at-large playoff bid.

But there are also plenty of unresolved question marks. The first is the Trojans' ability to protect the quarterback, very much in doubt after Saturday. Another is whether USC can afford to stumble out of the gate, as on Saturday, and rally back against a team such as Penn State; the Nittany Lions go to the Coliseum on Oct. 12. While the Trojans kept the Michigan run game in check for long stretches, the defense allowed three big plays, including a 63-yard run to Kaleb Mullings on the game-winning drive. The Wolverines finished with 290 yards rushing.

And there's some question about what it means to lose to Michigan. The Wolverines are inept offensively and clearly not built to contend for another national title. But when it counted, they had enough to hand USC a painful setback as new members of the Big Ten.

The Trojans, Michigan and Utah lead college football's winners and losers from Week 4:

Winners

Tennessee

Get your tickets now, because seats on the Tennessee bandwagon are going fast. The Volunteers showed why they are one of the best teams in the country and a real national championship contender by pushing around Oklahoma in a 25-15 road win. Offensively, young quarterback Nico Iamaleava wasn't perfect and UT played more conservatively than usual, though the running game was able to set an early tone and put the Sooners on their heels. The bigger story is on defense. The Volunteers have given up just two touchdowns in four games and limited OU to 222 yards of offense and 1.1 yards per carry. On both sides of the ball, Tennessee looks like a very elite team.

Utah

Utah's 22-19 win at Oklahoma State puts the Utes ahead of Iowa State, Kansas State and underrated Central Florida as the team to beat in the Big 12.

That's in big part because the Utes

Utah's Micah Bernard slips past the tackle of the Oklahoma State defense on his way to 182 yards rushing Saturday. SARAH PHIPPS/THE OKLAHOMAN did so without quarterback Cam Rising in the lineup, meaning there might be another gear they've yet to tap into through four games. With the senior again sidelined – injuries are a constant concern for Rising, who's excellent when healthy – coach Kyle Whittingham turned to backup Isaac Wilson, who tossed a pair of interceptions but was bailed out by running back Micah Bernard's 182 yards on 25 carries. So the big story was the play on defense: Utah chewed through two OSU quarterbacks, gave up just 38 rushing yards and showed why it's more than ready to make a playoff push.

Clemson

After scoring 56 points in the first half of a 66-20 win against Appalachian State two weeks ago, Clemson dropped 45 first-half points against North Carolina State and sailed to a 59-35 win against a would-be ACC contender. (It turns out the Wolfpack are very much not that.) This explosiveness comes after a 34-3 loss to Georgia in the season opener raised an additional round of questions about the Tigers' under-achieving offense. While the Mountaineers and Wolfpack are not exactly elite competition, this quick turnaround strongly suggests Clemson is a legitimate ACC player and a contender for the College Football Playoff, whether as the conference winner or via an at-large bid. Quarterback Cade Klubnik had 209 yards and four total touchdowns against North Carolina State and has a combined 11 touchdowns across these past two games.

Indiana

The strength of schedule isn't impressive: Florida International, Western Illinois, UCLA and Charlotte. The final scores are, though: 31-7, 77-3, 42-13 and 52-14, respectively. With transfer quarterback Kurtis Rourke at the controls, the Indiana offense looks like one of the best in recent program history while new coach Curt Cignetti looks like one of the more inspired hires of this past off-season. After Saturday's rout over Charlotte, the Hoosiers are unbeaten through four games for the first time since the 2020 season – Indiana's only ranked finish since 1989 – while Cignetti is the first new coach in program history to start his tenure 4-0.

Florida State

FSU finally got into the win column on its fourth try by topping California 14-9. Wins are good – better than losses – and maybe no team needed one more than the Seminoles, previously seen cratering to the most disappointing start in program history. Not that this is the sort of victory that does much to increase optimism: Cal is pretty good but nowhere near great, and the Seminoles were outgained by more than 100 yards while quarterback DJ Uiagalelei continued to struggle. In the end, the win came down to two missed field goal attempts by the Golden Bears, both inside 40 yards.

Losers

Memphis

One week after beating Florida State in Tallahassee to rise to the top of the ladder in the Group of Five, Memphis tossed away all that goodwill and momentum with a 56-44 loss at Navy. In hindsight, maybe going from the highs of one of the biggest regular-season wins in program history to a road trip against an option team was a recipe for disaster. Riding this powerful running game, the Midshipmen finished with 361 yards on 39 carries, including a 90-yard score by quarterback Blake Horvath in the fourth quarter. Defensively, Navy gave up 659 yards but came up with a few key stops while the Tigers held possession for nearly 36 minutes. While still very much in the mix for the playoff, the loss could force Memphis to run the table from here to fend off other contenders from the Group of Five, including UNLV and James Madison.

North Carolina

How do you, as North Carolina, give up 70 points at home to aforementioned James Madison? Start with five turnovers, the program's most in a game since Sept. 27, 2018. Because those giveaways help set JMU up with two possessions beginning inside the Tar Heels' 35-yard line, both of which ended with touchdowns. Also, give up one score on a blocked punt and another on a pick-six. But that doesn't quite explain just how horrendously bad UNC was defensively. The Tar Heels allowed 611 yards of offense on 8.4 yards per play as the Dukes landed a big-time, marquee win for new coach Bob Chesney and took a big leap into the playoff mix.

Mississippi State

It doesn't get much more damning than this: Mississippi State is worse than Florida. How much worse? Try 17 points worse, and at home, no less. Behind 201 passing yards and three scores from Graham Mertz, the 45-28 win gives the Gators and coach Billy Napier a boost amid another slow start, slightly raising the odds of six wins and a bowl berth. (The odds are still pretty low.) On the flip side, losing in the friendly confines to a team and program clearly on life support sets off some alarm bells about the state of the Bulldogs under new coach Jeff Lebby, who won his debut against Eastern Kentucky but has since lost at Arizona State, been embarrassed at home against Toledo and been blown away by the Gators.

Kansas

One of the drawbacks of actually being a successful football program – something Kansas definitely was not for a very long time are the expectations that come with competency. After back-to-back bowl berths and a nine-win season in 2023, the Jayhawks are one of the biggest disappointments in the Power Four after giving up a late score to lose 32-28 to West Virginia and fall to 1-3. What makes it worse, somehow, is that each loss has been extremely avoidable – they led in the fourth quarter of all three games. Against the Mountaineers, KU was ahead 28-17 after scoring with 5:39 left but then gave up a pair of scoring drives down the stretch to drop this Big 12 opener and put its bowl hopes in some jeopardy.

Mack Brown faces uncertain future

Second UNC stint is far from great

Dan Wolken

We live in a society that struggles with the concept of age. People are living longer, working longer and becoming more resistant to the idea that they're supposed to fade into the background and pass the torch to a new generation.

In some ways, it's aspirational. We all want to be vibrant and productive in our 70s and 80s. At the same time, hanging on to power looks selfish and delusional when the results are no longer there.

North Carolina coach Mack Brown, now 73 years old, has had an incredible life in college football. It began as a head coach in 1983 when Appalachian State put him in charge at age 32. It brought him to Tulane, then North Carolina, then Texas where he won a national championship and had a decade-long run of success few have ever matched.

Brown eventually went to the television booth when his run at Texas went south, but he always wanted one more shot on the sideline. North Carolina and athletic director Bubba Cunningham gave it to him in 2019, when Brown vowed that his goal was to win a national title at a place that meant so much in his life and career.

It seemed really romantic back then. Now, it seems ridiculous.

Brown isn't going to win another national title. Will he even make it through this season?

After North Carolina's embarrassing 70-50 loss to James Madison on Saturday, Inside Carolina reported that Brown's emotional speech in the locker room suggested he was going to walk away. But after cooling off, Brown told ESPN he would be back at work on Sunday.

This isn't sustainable.

Here are the facts. In his second stint at North Carolina, Brown's record is 41-28. In his first four years, the Tar Heels have been ranked at the end of the season just once: No. 17 in the final poll of 2020. That's particularly disappointing when he's had elite-level quarterbacks like Sam Howell and Drake Maye on his roster until this year. The loss to James Madison underscores the problems Brown has had with his defensive coordinators, from Jay Bateman to Gene Chizik and now Geoff Collins, the former Georgia Tech head coach.

Has it been a disaster in the big picture? No, not at North Carolina, which has always been one of college football's biggest underachievers.

But Mack's second stint in Chapel Hill been a success? It would be disingenuous to say yes.

At an age when all of his contemporaries have left the stage, does it make sense for Brown to be hanging on? Not if the goal is for North Carolina to have a football program that contends for ACC and national titles.

It's sad and uncomfortable and uncouth to talk about so bluntly, but even a beloved Hall of Famer like Brown reaches a point where it no longer makes sense to run a college football program that is trying to win at the highest level.

Losing in such awful fashion to James Madison will supercharge that conversation. And that's why North Carolina is No. 1 in the Misery Index, a weekly measurement of which fan bases are feeling the most angst.

Four more in misery

TCU: Since appearing in the College Football Playoff national championship game – and yes, said appearing rather than playing because the Horned Frogs didn't play much football that night against Georgia – TCU has lost nine of its past 16 games. And the frustration of that predicament manifested Saturday when Sonny Dykes lost his cool on multiple occasions and was ejected early in the second half of a 66-42 loss to SMU.

When's the last time you saw a college football coach get thrown out of a game for two unsportsmanlike conduct penalties?

Then again, when is the last time you saw a program get close to the pinnacle of the sport and then completely retreat to a level of mediocrity that looks far more permanent than the success they experienced two years ago? Let's face facts. TCU's 2022 season was a fluke.

Oklahoma quarterback Jackson Arnold had a tough going Saturday against Tennessee and was replaced in the second half. BRYAN TERRY/THE OKLAHOMAN

Maybe one of the biggest flukes in the history of college football. And now, TCU isn't even the best program in the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex, much less the state of Texas, much less the Central time zone, much less the Big 12, much less the country.

Virginia Tech: In mid-October last season, the Hokies were 2-4 and going nowhere. Brent Pry, the second-year head coach, was trending toward the hot seat. Whit Babcock, the longtime athletic director, was facing criticism for a second consecutive disappointing football hire.

But then the Virginia Tech turned it around, winning five of its last seven games to get to 7-6. Hokie Nation suddenly felt great. With more returning starters than anyone in the ACC, expectations soared. Pry was the toast of the town. The Hokies were back!

Of course, that was before any games were played. And now that we're a month into the season, we can say definitively that the Hokies are not back. If anything, they're back to irrelevance. They stink.

Virginia Tech's 26-23 loss at home to Rutgers leaves them 2-2 (they lost a season opener to Vanderbilt), and now we have to reexamine last year's run to a winning record. The Hokies' finish included wins over Wake Forest, Syracuse, Boston College, Virginia and Tulane. Not exactly Murderers' Row. Maybe this year's schedule will turn out to be just as weak, but nobody is going to be fooled. The Hokies have major problems.

Auburn: The reason you want Hugh Freeze to coach your program is to score points. That's why you overlook the NCAA violations at Ole Miss, the inappropriate phone calls that got him fired and the general sense of phoniness that has made him college football's version of Jimmy Swaggart over the last decade.

It's not a bad trade-off, in theory. If you believe the entire sport is a cesspool, then Freeze is worth the bad publicity – as long as he's winning.

But in two years at Auburn, the cost-benefit analysis on Freeze has hit a snag. His team doesn't win. It doesn't score points. It isn't entertaining to anyone, unless punting and committing an unusual number of turnovers (14 through four games) is your idea of a good time.

Auburn's 24-14 loss to Arkansas, dropping the Tigers to 2-2, should absolutely put Freeze on a short leash. If you're going to be an offensive guru, you have to do better than 14 points, which is what Auburn managed against the only power conference teams on its schedule thus far in California and Arkansas.

Freeze version 2.0 just isn't working in the SEC. And if you want to blame the quarterback position – neither Payton Thorne nor Hank Brown has looked the part – then you have to blame Freeze too. He's had two years to improve that position, and so far there's zero promise of a better future.

Oklahoma: Jackson Arnold was one of the best quarterback recruits in the country, and it was a massive coup in January of 2022 when Brent Venables got the Denton, Texas, native to commit to the Sooners. But recruiting rankings don't mean guaranteed success at the college level, and the Sooners are going through major growing pains with Arnold.

While the narrative of Tennessee's 25-15 win in Norman will focus a lot on Vols coach Josh Heupel, who won a national title as Oklahoma's quarterback in 2000 and was Bob Stoops' offense coordinator for four years before getting fired, the actual story here is Arnold.

He completed just 7 of 16 passes for 54 yards, threw an interception and fumbled in the first half when the Sooners were within sniffing distance of the end zone. He got pulled for Michael Hawkins, who wasn't amazing but looked steadier and more confident in the second half. If Oklahoma had gotten decent quarterback play for 60 minutes, it might have had a chance to upset the Vols. Instead, the Sooners look a step or two below where they need to be in the SEC. The quarterback situation is going to be a key point of contention for Oklahoma in the second half of the season as it evaluates what's necessary to compete at this level.

Miserable but not miserable enough

Nebraska: Stop us if you've heard this before. The Huskers found a way to lose a game they absolutely should have won. It's not as devastating this time because Nebraska is clearly on the right track under Matt Rhule, and quarterback Dylan Raiola is an insanely good freshman who should eventually get the Huskers in the College Football Playoff mix. Still, Nebraska missed a 39-yard field goal attempt with three minutes remaining and then lost 31-24 in overtime to Illinois. That dropped the Huskers to 17-43 in one-score games since the start of the 2015 season.

Vanderbilt: No program in the country is as reliably awful in crunchtime as the Commodores. Year after year, coach after coach, recruiting class after recruiting class, Vanderbilt's ability to lose winnable games is as consistent as the sunrise. The Commodores had their chances to register a huge win at Missouri on Saturday, but kicker Brock Taylor missed a 50-yarder with 3:06 remaining for the lead in regulation and a 31-yarder to extend the game to a third overtime as Vanderbilt lost to Missouri 30-27. And it's not like Taylor is a bad kicker: He made a 57-yarder in the game but just couldn't connect when the pressure was on. This is just what happens at Vanderbilt, where head coach Clark Lea is now 2-23 in the SEC.

Northern Illinois: The Huskies had two weeks to bask in the glory of upsetting Notre Dame on Sept. 7, and they took full advantage of the interview requests and social media cachet that came their way. But the party ended on Saturday when they lost at home to Buffalo 23-20 in two overtimes. Somehow, Northern Illinois' defense only gave up 184 yards but lost when Upton Bellenfant – maybe the best name in all of college football – made a 37-yard field goal in overtime for the Bulls.

Mississippi State: The Bulldogs are headed for their worst season in nearly two decades. Under Sylvester Croom in 2006, Mississippi State finished 3-9 and fired him two years later. That led to a long run of success under Dan Mullen, who raised expectations at one of the most challenging programs in the SEC. Needless to say, Jeff Leiby is going to struggle living up to those expectations. Mississippi State is now 1-3 in Leiby's first season after a 45-28 shellacking by Florida at home, which came just one week after losing by 24 points to Toledo. To be fair to Leiby, most of Mississippi State's team hit the transfer portal after last season when Zach Arnott was fired. But it's now clear this is going to be a really painful and long rebuild.

Colorado celebrates win into rainy night

USA TODAY

BOULDER, Colo. – The fans stormed the field before the game was even over.

It was wet. It was wild. And now the Colorado Buffaloes are on the march again after an incredible series of clutch plays at the end of a 38-31 overtime win Saturday at home against Baylor.

Cue the celebration in the locker room under head coach Deion Sanders.

“It was a party, man,” Colorado receiver LaJohntay Wester said of the postgame scene. “I loved it, man. ... Ain’t nothing like here, man, especially after a win. There’s nothing like it.”

There was nothing like what happened at the end of the game, either. After falling behind by 14 points earlier in the game, the Buffs stormed back with a Hail Mary pass as time expired in regulation play, followed by a forced fumble in overtime to end the game from two-way superstar Travis Hunter.

“Great, great, great, great, great win,” Deion Sanders said afterward.

And yet it all came so close to never happening. Here’s how it went down and what it means after Colorado survived – barely – in front of a sold-out homecoming crowd of 52,794 at Folsom Field. The Buffs are now off to a 3-1 start for the second straight year under Sanders while Hunter keeps finding new ways to steal the show.

The final drive in regulation for Colorado

Baylor (2-2) almost put the game away in the fourth quarter with a 45-yard field goal try on its final drive of regulation with 2:16 remaining. If the kick succeeded, the Buffs likely would have lost. But the kick missed wide right, allowing the Buffs to get the ball back with Baylor leading 31-24.

What happened next was a parade of close calls, near misses and “Perfect Timing,” which also happens to be the rap song of Colorado quarterback Shedeur Sanders, Deion’s youngest son.

“They never gave up,” Deion Sanders said. “They never surrendered.”

At one point, Shedeur Sanders faced fourth down and 1 at the Baylor 46-yard line – a play that would have ended the game for the Buffs if he didn’t convert. Sanders instead got a first down on a 3-yard run to keep Colorado’s hopes alive.

Two plays later, Sanders threw a long second-down pass near the end zone to receiver Will Sheppard, a transfer from Vanderbilt. But Sheppard dropped the potential touchdown catch, stopping the clock with two seconds left.

“We should have had that one,” Deion Sanders said. “But we caught the one that we needed to catch.”

The Hail Mary, nearly 30 years after that other Hail Mary

After the drop by Sheppard, there was time for one more play – a 43-yard Hail Mary pass, nearly 30 years to the day of Colorado’s 64-yard Hail Mary to win at Michigan as time expired on Sept. 24, 1994.

“I just trusted God,” Shedeur Sanders said. “I just threw it up to God, and God answered the prayer for sure.”

Shedeur Sanders rolled left and lofted it to the left corner of the end zone, where Wester turned to catch it in the rain for a 43-yard touchdown catch with no time remaining in the fourth quarter. It helped that Baylor’s defense was paying more attention to Hunter, allowing Wester to free himself more easily to reel it in.

“It was a Hail Mary,” said Wester, a transfer from Florida Atlantic. “I was one-on-one. I just ran down there. I see him (Shedeur) rolling out, and then I see the ball coming my way. As a receiver, your job is to make the quarterback right whether it’s a good ball or bad ball, and I just made a play on the ball.”

After the extra-point kick, the game went to overtime tied 31-31.

Overtime and the fumble forced by Travis Hunter

Colorado got the ball first in overtime and drove 25 yards in seven plays, including 8 yards rushing and 12 yards passing from Shedeur Sanders. “Whatever it takes to win,” Shedeur said.

Freshman running back Micah Welch rushed up the middle for a 1-yard touchdown to cap the drive, helping put the Buffs up 38-31.

But Baylor still had its chance to respond and even ran four plays to get to the Colorado 2-yard line, including a 13-yard run by quarterback Sawyer Robertson that would have been a touchdown if not for an open-field tackle by Buffs safety Cam’Ron Silmon-Craig.

One play later, the ball went to running back Dominic Richardson, who had a clear path to the end zone except for one player.

Travis Hunter.

Hunter stood his ground at the goal line, forcing Richardson to try to leap past him. The ball then came loose and tumbled into the end zone.

“I knew that was coming at me,” Hunter said. “They don’t think I can tackle, so I had to show ‘em.”

Hunter finished with seven catches for 130 yards on offense and three tackles and the clutch forced fumble on defense.

The crazy postgame scene

After the fumble, the game was over. Buffs win.

Or so it seemed.

Colorado fans reacted to the fumble by storming the field in the rain, but game officials still needed to review replays of the play to confirm it. It wasn’t quite over yet, in other words, leading to a call for the fans to move back and leave.

“I want to apologize to the opposition, the way we stormed the field,” Deion Sanders said.

Sanders said he didn’t even get the chance to shake hands afterward with Baylor head coach Dave Aranda.

“I don’t like what transpired at the end of the game, but I love what transpired at the end of the game,” Deion Sanders said. “We have a fan base that’s phenomenal.”

After replays confirmed the fumble, the homecoming party kicked into overdrive while the Bears went home wondering what had just happened. Aranda called it a “heart-wrenching loss” and said his team was “gutted.”

For his part, Hunter celebrated afterward by rapidly crawling on his hands and knees through the end zone – a personal shout-out to popular on-line streamer Kai Cenat.

“I had to do it,” Hunter said.

The Buffs still kind of got lucky

They gave up two huge touchdown plays in the second quarter, silencing a crowd that had come to make noise. The first was a 100-yard kickoff return for a touchdown by Baylor’s Jamaal Bell down the right sideline. The second was a 45-yard fourth-down run from Baylor quarterback Robertson, helping put the Bears up 24-10 with 4:19 left before halftime.

The Buffs also gave up eight quarterback sacks, just a week after only giving up one in a 28-9 win at Colorado State.

Shedeur Sanders called the win “a relief.” He completed 25 of 41 passes for 341 yards and two touchdowns, including a 58-yarder to sophomore receiver Omarion Miller in the second quarter to help cut Baylor’s lead to 24-17 with 50 seconds left before halftime. Miller almost was tackled near the 35-yard line but kept going to score. But Shedeur found fault with himself and said he missed reads.

“You gotta understand I can’t have a game like that again,” Shedeur said.

The question now is whether the Buffaloes can sustain their success, unlike last year when they lost seven of their final eight games after starting 3-1. If they had lost a game like that against Baylor, they’d be facing a serious uphill fight to get the minimum six wins required to earn a postseason bowl berth.

Now they’ve got momentum heading into a cross-country trip to play Saturday at Central Florida (3-0), followed by a weekend off Oct. 5.

“I don’t like how it played out, but I loved the results,” Deion Sanders said. “I think we’re so much better than what we’re showing you at times.”

2017 champ out of Cup playoffs after speeding

USA TODAY

While Kyle Larson was running away with the Bass Pro Shops Bristol Night Race on Saturday night, fascinating battles were taking place farther back in the pack.

Bristol served as the first elimination race of the NASCAR Cup Series playoffs, where 12 drivers would advance to the second round and four would be eliminated from championship contention. While no driver could touch Larson, who led an incredible 462 of the 500 laps en route to his fifth win of the season and the 28th of his career, there was drama brewing all over the Tennessee short track as the 16 playoff drivers fought for positions on the track and points in the standings.

The cutline was where the real action centered, with teams calculating points as the race was being run to keep their drivers in 12th place or better in the playoff standings. The biggest example: A driver running in second in the middle of Stage 3 had to worry about a driver racing in 30th and multiple laps down.

That was the case for Martin Truex Jr., the 2017 Cup Series champion who has announced that this will be his final season of full-time racing.

Truex came into Bristol ranked 15th in the playoff standings, but he qualified fourth on Saturday and was racing in the Top 5 most of the night. He was doing exactly what he needed to squeak into the Round of 12. At the other end of the spectrum was Daniel Suarez, who ranked fifth in the standings after two playoff races but had an extremely slow car all weekend.

And then everything turned on a penalty on lap 332 of 500. Truex came down pit road second and kept his position after getting fuel and changing tires – until NASCAR informed the No. 19 Joe Gibbs Racing team that Truex was being penalized for speeding, sending him to the back of the field for the restart. Where moments before a runner-up finish and advancement in the playoffs seemed well within his grasp, Truex now had to figure out a way to drive through the field and, at the same time, worry about a driver racing laps behind him. In the end, Truex could never regain that ground. He finished 24th at Bristol and was one of four drivers to be eliminated from the playoffs along with teammate Ty Gibbs, 2012 series champion Brad Keselowski, and Harrison Burton.

“It’s really tough – when it’s .09 miles per hour that kind of screws your whole chance at a good season up. It’s on me, obviously, it’s my mistake,” a clearly disappointed Truex said after the race.

“They said we were going to have to run second or third there to have a chance, and I don’t know if we could have done it, but it would have been nice to see. We had a really strong car tonight, and we got a lot of stage points, we did what we needed there, just hate that I screwed it up.

“But from here we’ll just go on to race hard and hopefully get back to victory lane before it’s all said and done.”

Suarez was never in contention to win or even race in the Top 10. He qualified 35th of 38 drivers and never could recover. Larson put him a lap down and then another and then another, and it seemed the Trackhouse Racing driver’s chance to reach the Round of 12 was rapidly disintegrating. But Suarez had one thing going for him that Truex didn’t – strong performances in the first two playoff races, including a runner-up finish in the opener at Atlanta Motor Speedway, which allowed him to build up a lot of points – he had 44 more than Truex – heading into this elimination race. And Suarez needed every one after finishing 31st Saturday night.

“It was a struggle,” Suarez admitted after the race. “Since yesterday, when we unloaded the car for first practice, we just didn’t have the speed. If you don’t have the speed out of the trailer, it’s very, very difficult to bring it back to speed.

“Luckily, we had a great Atlanta, a decent Watkins Glen after a broken wheel, and we were able to build a cushion. And we definitely used every single point out of that cushion.”

But Truex wasn’t the only driver Suarez needed to worry about while he was driving around in the back of the pack. There was also Gibbs, who entered the night 12th in the playoff standings, to contend with. Interestingly, a pit-road speeding penalty possibly doomed Gibbs’ night as well, though his penalty occurred much earlier in the race. And while the 21-year-old grandson of team owner Joe Gibbs was able to recover and race his way back into the Top 10 in the third stage, he could never move beyond eighth. He eventually finished 15th in the race and behind Suarez in the standings.

In the end, Bristol provided a huge celebration for Larson and Hendrick Motorsports, a huge sigh of relief for Suarez and Trackhouse Racing and mixed emotions at Joe Gibbs Racing, with two drivers eliminated but two others – Christopher Bell and Denny Hamlin – advancing.

The playoffs now shift to Kansas Speedway, the first of three races in the second round, before the mayhem of Talladega Superspeedway and another elimination race at Charlotte Motor Speedway on the Roval – a part road course, part oval circuit. The playoff drama will surely continue, but it will do so without Truex, and the possibility of a glorious end to a Hall of Fame career.

NFL SUNDAY ROUNDUP

Vikings rout Texans, now 3-0

Field Level Media | Reuters

Sam Darnold threw four touchdown passes, Aaron Jones accounted for 148 scrimmage yards and a score, and the Minnesota Vikings rolled to a 34-7 win over the Houston Texans on Sunday afternoon in Minneapolis.

Darnold completed 17 of 28 passes for 181 yards for Minnesota (3-0). Jones finished with 19 carries for 102 yards to go along with five catches for 46 yards and a touchdown.

C.J. Stroud hit on 20 of 31 passes for 215 yards, one TD and two interceptions for Houston (2-1). Cam Akers was limited to nine carries for 21 yards as the Texans struggled on the ground without injured starter Joe Mixon.

The game started ugly for Stroud and the Texans and never really improved. Stroud had his second pass intercepted by Vikings linebacker Kamu Grugier-Hill, who returned the pick to Houston's 21-yard line.

Minnesota capitalized less than three minutes later to grab a 7-0 lead. Darnold found Justin Jefferson for a 6-yard touchdown pass.

The Vikings made it 14-0 with 1:08 to go in the first quarter. After a missed field goal attempt by the Texans, Darnold led a six-play, 56-yard drive culminated with an 8-yard TD pass to Jones.

Unbeaten Steelers dominate short-handed Chargers

Justin Fields threw a 55-yard touchdown pass to Calvin Austin III to highlight a dominant second-half performance that lifted the host Pittsburgh Steelers to a 20-10 win over the Los Angeles Chargers in a battle of unbeaten.

The Fields-Austin connection closed the scoring with 7:02 left in the game and added insult to injury for Los Angeles (2-1), which lost quarterback Justin Herbert to an apparent ankle issue and linebacker Joey Bosa to an ailing hip.

Fields finished with 245 yards, the touchdown and an interception on 25-for-32 passing. He also rushed for a score.

Eagles hand Saints first loss

Saquon Barkley rushed for 147 yards and two TDs, including the game-winner from 4 yards out with 1:01 remaining, and the visiting Philadelphia Eagles (2-1) beat the New Orleans Saints 15-12.

Jalen Hurts passed for 311 yards and Dallas Goedert had 10 catches for 170 yards, including a 61-yard reception that set up the winning score.

In addition, the Eagles defense stymied the Saints' high-scoring offense, which had averaged 45.5 points in their first two games. Derek Carr, who entered the game leading the NFL in passer rating (142.4), completed just 14 of 25 for 142 yards for New Orleans (2-1).

Carr, however, drove the Saints 50 yards on nine plays to a go-ahead 13-yard touchdown pass to Chris Olave with barely two minutes to play.

After the Eagles regained the lead, Reed Blankenship intercepted Carr.

Bo Nix sparks Broncos past Bucs

In his first NFL win, Bo Nix completed 25 of 36 passes for 216 yards and rushed for 47 yards and a touchdown, leading the visiting Denver Broncos to a 26-7 win over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Tyler Badie ran for 70 yards and Courtland Sutton caught seven passes for 68 yards, as the Broncos (1-2) held Tampa Bay scoreless in the second half.

Wil Lutz made all four of his field goal attempts for Denver.

Baker Mayfield completed 25 of 33 passes for 163 yards and threw for a TD and an interception. Bucky Irving led Tampa Bay (2-1) with 70 rushing yards.

Giants avoid 0-3 start

Daniel Jones threw two touchdown passes to Malik Nabers as the New York Giants notched a solid 21-15 victory over the host Cleveland Browns.

Devin Singletary rushed for a TD and Dexter Lawrence had two of the Giants' eight sacks. New York (1-2) held Cleveland to 217 total yards.

Jones was 24 of 34 passing for 236 yards and the two touchdowns to Nabers, who finished with eight receptions for 78 yards.

Deshaun Watson completed 21 of 37 passes for 196 yards and two touchdowns for the Browns (1-2).

Colts slide past Bears for first win of season

Jonathan Taylor ran for 110 yards and two touchdowns, Trey Sermon added a rushing TD and Jaylon Jones snagged two interceptions to boost the host Indianapolis Colts to a 21-16 victory against the Chicago Bears. Indianapolis (1-2) overcame two Anthony Richardson interceptions, succeeding with its ground game while shoring up what had been a suspect run defense. The Colts had 150 rushing yards compared to 63 for the Bears (1-2).

Malik Willis leads Packers

Malik Willis threw for a touchdown and ran for another as the Green Bay Packers (2-1) never trailed in a 30-14 win over the Tennessee Titans (0-3) in Nashville. Playing against the team that traded him last month for a seventh-round draft choice, Willis completed 13 of 19 passes for 202 yards and added 73 yards on the ground in the best game of his three-year NFL career.

'72 perfect Dolphins star Morris dies at 77

Steve Gardner
USA TODAY

Eugene "Mercury" Morris, a fleet-footed running back for eight NFL seasons and a key cog in the undefeated 1972 Miami Dolphins, has died at 77.

Morris teamed with backfield mates Larry Csonka and Jim Kiick as the Dolphins won back-to-back Super Bowls under coach Don Shula in 1972 and 1973.

Selected in the third round of the 1969 NFL draft out of West Texas A&M, Morris began his pro career as a kick returner, leading the NFL in kickoff return yardage as a rookie and taking one back 105 yards for a TD.

He became an effective change-of-pace back, subbing in for the bruising Csonka, earning the first of three consecutive Pro Bowl honors in 1971.

Morris' best season came in Miami's perfect 1972 campaign. He rushed for an even 1,000 yards as he and Csonka became the first teammates in NFL history to run for 1,000 yards in the same season. He also led the league that season with 12 rushing touchdowns as the Dolphins capped a 17-0 season with a 14-7 victory over Washington in Super Bowl 7.

Morris tallied 954 yards on an NFL-best 6.4 yards per carry in 1973 as he was again named a Pro Bowler and the Dolphins won a second consecutive Super Bowl.

He joined the San Diego Chargers for the final season of his career in 1976. He finished with 4,133 rushing yards and 35 TDs – 31 rushing, one receiving and three on kickoff returns.

After retiring, Morris became one of the most prominent members of the undefeated Dolphins in their annual celebrations, coining the term "Perfectville" to describe their unique place in history.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL FOUR DOWNS AND A BRACKET

Michigan embraces its power running game again

Matt Hayes

USA TODAY NETWORK

First Down Michigan: Welcome back, Bully Ball

Those bruising, battering runs from Kael Mullings. Pounding and thundering and reverberating.

All the way to Columbus, Ohio.

Michigan found itself again Saturday, a punishing 27-24 rock fight of a welcome to the Big Ten defeat of then-No. 12 Southern Cal.

But look deeper. It wasn't so much an upset win for the suddenly shaky defending national champs as it was recommitting to a powerful run game and sending a message to the Buckeyes.

Because while Michigan has been grinding through the first month of the season with difficult games against Texas and USC, Ohio State has been frolicking through three guarantee games.

But just in case Ohio State – and everyone else in the Big Ten – believed Michigan had lost its way after dominating the conference the past three seasons, the winning drive against Southern Cal ended that narrative.

Eight carries from Mullings on the 10-play winning touchdown drive – 4 yards, 63, 1, 8, 2, 3, 2, 1 – capped an 89-yard drive where Michigan lined up with four minutes remaining and played bully ball. Like it did all game.

The drive ended, on fourth-and-goal from the 1, with Mullings ramming over the left side for the winning points with 29 seconds to play.

How dominating was the drive?

Mullings' 63-yard run, where he dragged USC cornerback John Humphrey for 8 of the yards, was the highlight. But the underlying reality for USC (and, hello, Ohio State): Trojans coach Lincoln Riley started using timeouts after the 63-yard run because he knew his defense couldn't stop the run – and he was desperately trying to preserve time.

Michigan had 290 yards rushing and three touchdowns on 46 carries and more important left no doubt where the rest of the season is headed.

quarter, and the score of a big road win in the SEC doesn't represent the carnage that played out on the field.

But Tennessee, everyone, has an elite defense.

Oklahoma could've played eight quarters and not scored enough points to beat a complete Tennessee team. It's no longer all about Volunteers coach Josh Heupel's Blur Ball offense.

The defense is beginning to look a whole lot like those elite SEC defenses of the College Football Playoff era. A 25-15 win at Oklahoma included two forced fumbles, an interception, a safety and 11 tackles for loss.

How very Georgia of Tennessee.

And that's the point of Saturday night's exercise in Norman, Oklahoma. Tennessee had been defense optional for much of Heupel's first three seasons in Knoxville.

Now this Tennessee team looks a lot like the Oklahoma team he quarterbacked to a national title in 2000. The ability to score big with the backbone of a stout defense.

Just how good was the Tennessee defense? The offense lost fumbles at its 20 and 35, and the game wasn't really close.

Oklahoma rushed for 36 yards on 34 carries and never really made any throws of significance – especially when it mattered. Starting quarterback Jackson Arnold played so poorly, he was benched late in the first half for true freshman Michael Hawkins Jr.

Tennessee has a defensive line that rivals the elite units of the late 1990s under coach Phil Fulmer. They're athletic and active, and they dictate what offenses can do.

By the end of the game, Heupel did what he has always done at Oklahoma: 10 wins in 10 games as a player, and now one win in one game as a head coach.

Third Down Utah's statement

So a big game happened in the Big 12, and Utah officially introduced its new league to what its old league was forced to deal with for years.

A tough, talented team doing whatever it takes to win a game.

Like playing nearly flawless on the road in a difficult environment with a backup quarterback playing for the injured star.

Or the tight end running Wildcat and scoring on a short-yardage touchdown.

Or the defense – the trademark Utah defense – suffocating Oklahoma State in an important conference game that will have lasting impact in the College Football Playoff race.

You want defense?

Utah built a 22-3 lead with six minutes to play, and Oklahoma State had 158 total yards.

Then the Utes dialed down the pressure to avoid giving up a big play and got out of Stillwater with a deceiving 22-19 win.

"Made it a lot more dramatic than we needed to," Utah coach Kyle Whittingham said after the game.

But think about this: Utah already has a win against one of the two teams that have the roster to beat the Utes – and won't play the other (Kansas State) unless they play in the Big 12 championship game.

In fact, Utah – which should get star quarterback Cam Rising back this week against Arizona – will be favored in all of its remaining games.

The most difficult tests remaining appear to be a home game against Iowa State (Nov. 23) and a road game against Central Florida (Nov. 29).

Fourth Down The rise of ... Vanderbilt?

Diego Pavia deserves better. Better than a hooked chip-shot field goal in an overtime loss to Missouri.

Better than the Vanderbilt defense folding with a minute to play in last week's loss to Georgia State, and giving up a 75-yard game-winning touchdown drive in 55 seconds.

Vanderbilt – yes, Vanderbilt – should be 4-0, and we should all be celebrating the most impactful transfer quarterback of 2024 instead of lamenting same ol' Vandy.

More impactful than Dillon Gabriel or Will Howard or Riley Leonard – all of whom landed on ready-made championship teams.

Pavia has elevated one of the worst Power Four conference teams into the land of respectability.

But for a missed 31-yard field goal attempt against Missouri, Vanderbilt could have eventually earned another significant upset (Virginia Tech) in the first month of the season behind the quarterback who last went viral for urinating on a rival's practice field.

Pavia led New Mexico State to 10 wins in 2023, including a 21-point win at Auburn.

He arrived at Vanderbilt with former coach Jerry Kill joining Clark Lea's coaching staff and has immediately changed the way the Commodores think about offense.

In four games, Pavia has accounted for 75.2% of Vanderbilt's production, throwing for 543 yards and four touchdowns, and rushing for 279 yards and two more touchdowns. The Commodores get an open week, before getting another upset opportunity.

Against mighty Alabama on Oct. 5.

Clark's confidence in Hull paying off

Lindsay Schnell

USA TODAY

Like most WNBA fans, Lexie Hull consumes a lot of Caitlin Clark content.

Any time Clark breaks a record, says something interesting or, like, sneezes, Hull is made aware.

But when Hull, Clark and Katie Lou Samuelson traveled with their boyfriends (in Samuelson's case, husband) to Mexico for a much-needed beach vacation during the Olympic break, Hull learned something new about Clark.

The No. 1 pick of the 2024 draft and the overwhelming favorite to win Rookie of the Year is ... funny.

Goofy, even. A prankster.

"She loves to stir up some trouble, that's for sure. If you need a laugh, she'll get it done for you," Hull told USA TODAY Sports.

What's more, Hull's friendship with Clark, and the on-court chemistry that's resulted from it, could be a difference-maker going into the WNBA playoffs.

The Fever, who haven't been to the postseason since 2016, started their playoff journey Sunday at Connecticut in the first of a three-game series versus the Sun. The Fever are the sixth seed and have won nine of their past 13 games. Everyone knows what they're going to get with Clark (19.2 points per game, 8.4 assists per game), 2023 Rookie of the Year Aliyah Boston (14.0 ppg, 8.9 rebounds per game) and two-time All-Star Kelsey Mitchell (19.2 ppg).

But Hull's rise this season has been the most impressive and, in many ways, the most surprising.

The No. 6 pick in the 2022 WNBA draft, Hull was a starter most of last season. Many thought that would change with the addition of Clark, who was predicted to go No. 1 in 2024 as soon as the Fever secured the top pick last December. When Indiana made it official on April 15, a video of Hull, Erica Wheeler and Maya Caldwell celebrating – and immediately putting on No. 22 red Fever jerseys – went viral.

Hull knew her role might change, but she embraced the opportunity to play with someone who rewrote the college record books.

"I want to play with the best players and I want to win games," Hull said. "Having her on your team makes your team better. I watched her in college and I was really impressed with her playmaking. Honestly, I was more excited about her passing ability than her scoring. I was excited to get out and run and make cuts, because I knew she'd find me."

That they clicked and immediately became good friends was a bonus.

And yet, even Hull admits the first few weeks of the season were rough.

Out of the rotation early – she did not leave the bench in six of the Fever's first 21 games – Hull got hot after the Olympic break. On Aug. 18, Indiana's second game back after the monthlong pause, Hull came off the bench and drained six of her seven 3-point attempts in a 92-75 win over Seattle.

"It was frustrating because I was in the gym every single day, but I felt like my performance wasn't matching up with the amount of work I was putting in," she said. "So getting to the point where I could just let it fly felt so good. Things were finally clicking, and that definitely changes the feeling of the game on both ends of the floor."

After that game, Clark posted on the platform formerly known as Twitter, "This is now a Lexie Hull fan account."

She's been on a roll ever since. Hull was inserted into the starting lineup Aug. 28; Indiana has gone 6-3 with her

"What she brings for us is a tenacity, especially on the defensive end. She's gonna be the one diving on the floor. She's gonna be the one chasing the best player all over the court. And she's obviously worked really hard on her shot as well."

Caitlin Clark, on Lexie Hull

in the first five. She's second in the WNBA in 3-point percentage, connecting on 47.1% of her attempts from long range. She's 24 of 38 post-Olympics, an eye-popping 63.2%.

Hull's confidence has clearly skyrocketed the second half of the season. That's especially true when she's on the floor with Clark, whose belief in Hull is obvious every time she feeds her the ball on the perimeter.

"I think there is a lot of confidence from her, but also, she has high expectations for everyone," said Hull, who is often seen laughing on the bench with Clark. "She's creating a lot of shots. We get open looks because of how much attention she draws, and when she does give up the ball, we get open shots. And when you knock those down, it gives you confidence."

Clark sees the difference in Hull, too. "What she brings for us is a tenacity, especially on the defensive end," Clark said. "She's gonna be the one diving on the floor. She's gonna be the one chasing the best player all over the court. And she's obviously worked really hard on her shot as well. The way she's been able to shoot the ball since the Olympic break is incredible. I think it's added a whole other dynamic for us."

Hull credits the month off for giving her, and others, a chance to build a relationship with Clark away from basketball. Based on past experiences, Hull knew camaraderie in the locker room could translate to games.

"I think even when I look at back at our success at Stanford, a lot of that came from really caring about each other and building those friendships off the court," said Hull, who helped the Cardinal to the 2021 NCAA title.

From 1,800 miles away, even Kate Martin, Clark's teammate at Iowa who now plays for the Las Vegas Aces, noticed Hull's improved play – and suspected Clark's friendship had something to do with it. Clark's ability to infuse her teammates with confidence, Martin said, is a game-changer.

"The best part of her game is her ability to make her teammates better," Martin said. "When you're that great of a player and that confident, other people start to believe it (about themselves) too."

At Iowa, Martin said she often felt Clark knew how good she could be before Martin realized it herself. Martin might be surprised that she made a WNBA roster, but Clark predicted it would happen.

Indiana coach Christie Sides has seen it, too. She said for all of Clark's accomplishments, her ability to elevate her teammates is "what separates her."

The surge in confidence for Hull hasn't just impacted her offensive production, either. Hull is often assigned to guard the opponent's best perimeter player, and she is known for hustle plays that typically don't show up on a stat sheet.

Since her resurgence mid-August Hull has made some sort of late pivotal play – knocking down a big shot, grabbing a key defensive rebound, deflecting a critical pass or taking a charge – in nearly every close Fever contest. TV analyst Debbie Antonelli, who has called every Indiana game this season, described her play on air recently as "vintage Lexie Hull."

For the Fever, it couldn't come at a better time.

WNBA PLAYOFFS

Fiebach and Stewart lead Liberty to win in opener

Staff and wire reports

Rookie Leonie Fiebach scored a career-high 21 points to help the New York Liberty beat the visiting Atlanta Dream 83-69 on Sunday in Game 1 of their WNBA first-round playoff series.

Breanna Stewart added 20 points, 11 rebounds and three blocks for the top-seeded Liberty, who never trailed and led by as many as 22. Game 2 of the best-of-three series is Tuesday.

Fiebach, whose previous career high was 16 points, started on Sunday after making just 15 during the regular season. She shot 7-for-8 from the floor, including all four of her 3-point attempts. Sabrina Ionescu made three triples and had 17 points, and Betnijah Laney-Hamilton added 10 points for New York. Both had five assists. Jonquel Jones paired nine points with seven boards.

New York outshot Atlanta 43.3% to 39.7% on field goal attempts and made 17 of 18 free throws.

Rhyne Howard had 14 points to lead the eighth-seeded Dream, who won at New York in Thursday's regular-season finale to clinch the final playoff spot.

Mabrey sparks Sun past Fever

A record-breaking performance from Marina Mabrey, playing in her first post-season with the Connecticut Sun, helped the third-seeded team to a 93-69 win over sixth-seeded Indiana in Game 1 of the quarterfinals Sunday.

Mabrey scored 27 points off the bench, a WNBA record for the playoffs, connecting on 9 of 20 shots, including 5 of 12 from 3.

But that might not have even been the most impressive performance Sunday, as Sun guard-forward Alyssa Thomas turned in her fourth career triple-double (12 points, 13 assists, 10 rebounds) of the postseason.

Caitlin Clark finished with 11 points on 4 of 17 shooting for the Fever, including 2 of 13 from 3. She also dished eight assists, and turned the ball over twice.

"I'm still at the early stage of my career," says busy actor Lucas Bravo. "I have a lot to prove." NATHANIAL GARY/USA TODAY

Patrick Ryan USA TODAY

NEW YORK – Lucas Bravo knows how you feel about his "Emily in Paris" character. ● For the last four seasons of the hit Netflix rom-com, French chef Gabriel (Bravo) has ping-ponged between his next-door neighbor, Emily (Lily Collins), and ex-fiancée, Camille (Camille Razat), only to torpedo both relationships. But Bravo, 36, won't shoulder the blame for his indecisive TV dreamboat. ● "I'm an actor and I don't make choices for him," shrugs Bravo, speaking hours after Netflix announced the series would return for a fifth season. "I don't know where it's going to go from here, but I hope we're not going to go through another Team This or Team That, because I don't like to be a choice; humans are complex. But, you know, the show is what it is."

Bravo is ready to show his dark side

Since "Emily" premiered in 2020, Bravo has worked hard to prove he's more than just a beefcake bourguignon. "I can't say it's the part where I'm showing the most range," he says candidly. "But it's not what the show is about. I'm mostly here to support the girls."

After other heartthrob roles in comedies "Ticket to Paradise" and "Mrs. Harris Goes to Paris," Bravo is

FALL STREAMING

Curl up to horrors and true tales at home

Brian Truitt USA TODAY

There are plenty of movies to watch at the cinema this fall. A bunch awaits those who like to stay closer to home, too, from a "Rosemary's Baby" prequel to a new Stephen King movie.

Just look to your favorite streaming services for a bumper crop of fresh film flavors. Apple TV+ boasts a George Clooney and Brad Pitt crime thriller team-up. Netflix has a Will Ferrell documentary, Anna Kendrick's directorial debut and a high-profile ensemble drama with Carrie Coon, Elizabeth Olsen and Natasha Lyonne. Amazon's Prime Video has an Ariana DeBose culinary horror flick as well as a Joseph Gordon-Levitt detective mystery. And Hulu's got a Sarah Paulson historical chiller because everybody loves spooky season.

Here's an exclusive peek at 15 movies you can soon stream from your sofa:

Natasha Lyonne, Elizabeth Olsen and Carrie Coon come together to help their ailing father "His Three Daughters." PROVIDED BY SAM LEVY/NETFLIX

'His Three Daughters' (Friday)

Three estranged sisters (Coon, Olsen and Lyonne) have to deal with hard feelings, face their past and hug it out big time when they come together to help their father (Jay O. Sanders) as he enters home hospice care in the emotional family drama.

● Where to watch: Netflix.

'Killer Heat' (Sept. 26)

Gordon-Levitt embraced being a noir detective in "Brick" and now again with this scenic mystery. Private eye Nick Bali (Gordon-Levitt) is an American expat living in Greece when he's hired to investigate the accidental death of a high-profile shipping magnate by the victim's sister-in-law (Shailene Woodley).

Julia Garner plays an injured dancer who finds dark dealings going on in her new digs in "Apartment 7A." PROVIDED BY GARETH GATRELL/PARAMOUNT+

'Apartment 7A' (Sept. 27)

A minor character in the 1968 horror classic "Rosemary's Baby" gets the spotlight in this freaky prequel, with Julia Garner as a rising star Broadway dancer whose career is derailed by a nasty injury. She's taken in by a seemingly kind, rich old couple and gets a second chance at fame but finds weird goings-on amid her swanky new digs.

● Where to watch: Paramount+.

'Rez Ball' (Sept. 27)

The drama, based on a true story, centers on the captain (Kauchani Bratt) and coach (Jessica Matten) of a

'Will & Harper' (Sept. 27)

A film festival favorite this year, the feel-good documentary focuses on Will Ferrell and his friend of 30 years, comedy writer Harper Steele. When Harper comes out as a trans woman, his "Saturday Night Live" buddy takes him on a cross-country road trip to revisit his favorite places – diners, sports arenas, biker bars – with a new perspective.

● Where to watch: Netflix.

'Wolfs' (Sept. 27)

Ever wonder if George Clooney and Brad Pitt were up for the same movie part? Well, their characters are hired for the same gig – in this case, rival lone-wolf fixers having to cover up a high-profile crime – in an action comedy written and directed by recent "Spider-Man" filmmaker Jon Watts.

● Where to watch: Apple TV+.

'Hold Your Breath' (Oct. 3)

The psychological horror tale mines history for creepy thrills. Paulson plays an overprotective mom in Dust Bowl-era Oklahoma keeping her kids safe from dust storms and disease when the appearance of a mysterious preacher (Ebon Moss-Bachrach) coincides with the coming of a dark presence around the family.

● Where to watch: Hulu.

'House of Spoils' (Oct. 3)

Do you wish the "The Bear" was scarier? In this foodie-friendly horror flick, Ariana DeBose plays a star chef who opens a high-end restaurant on a remote estate, though she has to grapple with bigger problems than poor plating – such as crippling self-doubt, kitchen mayhem and maybe even a haunting.

A group of college friends gets together for a reunion, one of them brings a suitcase containing a strange contraption, and by morning they'll never see each other the same way ever again. 'Fanatical: The Catfishing of Tegan and Sara' (Oct. 18)

Tegan and Sara were indie pop darlings in the 2000s who cultivated a safe space for the queer community online. Off stage, however, the identical twin Quin sisters met the downside of fame as well, and the documentary chronicles how personal files were stolen and Tegan Quin's identity was used in a nefarious catfishing scheme.

● Where to watch: Hulu.

'Woman of the Hour' (Oct. 18)

Anna Kendrick marks her directorial debut with this true-life 1970s-set thriller. She also stars as an aspiring Hollywood actress whose path crosses with a serial killer in the middle of an epic murder spree when both happen to be contestants on the same episode of "The Dating Game."

● Where to watch: Netflix.

'Road Diary: Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band' (Oct. 25)

Director Thom Zimny's fly-on-the-wall documentary follows Bruce Springsteen and his rock group on their current world tour, going back on the road for the first time in six years. The film digs into the methodology of "The Boss" and how he runs the band, from rehearsals to set-list creation.

● Where to watch: Hulu.

'Freedom' (Nov. 1)

Lucas Bravo, a breakout star from Netflix's "Emily in Paris," plays a charming rogue in this thriller, based on the exploits of a legendary French outlaw in the 1970s and '80s. Bruno Sulak (Bravo) becomes infamous for his daring heists and prison escapes but draws the ire of a dogged cop (Yvan Attal).

now stepping out of his comfort zone. He's playing a violent predator in #MeToo thriller "The Balconettes," which premiered at the Cannes Film Festival in May, and portraying a real-life Robin Hood figure in "Freedom" (streaming on Prime Video on Nov. 1), a biopic of French robber Bruno Sulak.

Dubbed "the gentleman bandit" because of his nonviolent crimes, Sulak was a true chameleon: described as a "con man" by police and "the most amazing lover" by his girlfriend, Bravo explains. The actor could relate to that malleability, as the son of professional soccer player Daniel Bravo, whose job uprooted his family every couple of years.

"I had to adapt as a kid and always be the new guy," Bravo remembers.

By age 15, he had enrolled in acting school and went on to make his screen debut in the 2013 French TV drama "Sous le Soleil de Saint-Tropez." "Freedom" marks his first time leading a project, which he found both "scary and exhilarating."

"It was actually the first time I stepped off set being satisfied with my work," he adds. "It made me really hungry for more."

George Clooney consoled him after success of his Netflix show

Bravo credits his "Ticket to Paradise" co-star George Clooney for keeping him on the Hollywood path. After the fizzy first season of "Emily" became a pop-culture phenomenon (and frequent punching bag on social media), Bravo was unsure whether he wanted to keep acting.

"I'm a very private person," he says. "I like my tiny circle of friends; I'm close to my family; I'm from a quiet place in the South of France. It's a lot of noise and opinions, and it really feels like walking through a house of mirrors all day. I was like, 'Maybe I'm too sensitive for this.'"

But working with Clooney and Julia Roberts on the 2022 movie, "I saw how enthusiastic George was. It was like his first student film," Bravo recalls. "He was excited and joking about everything, and bringing everybody together. I realized that being a leading man is not only being first on the call sheet but looking after every actor's well-being."

"I like mystery," says Lucas Bravo, who keeps his social media presence professional. NATHANIAL GARY/USA TODAY

He calls Clooney a mentor, who shares advice and invites him for dinner from time to time: "It brought me peace to see that you can still be a good human being in an industry that is a bit crazy."

Bravo says he isn't recognized by fans as much lately, ever since debuting a shaggy new look for his upcoming Max show "Merteuil," an adaptation of "Dangerous Liaisons." He keeps his Instagram strictly professional; no selfies or snaps of his breakfast. "I like mystery," the Frenchman says with a smile. "Mystery is sexy."

Wry and inquisitive, Bravo thoughtfully speaks about his passions for veganism, sustainability and ocean conservation. He has been taking Japanese classes for six months and hopes to go to Japan to shoot his directorial debut, which he describes as a love story. ("I really want to be immersed in their culture," he says.) In his free time, he enjoys backpacking through "crazy secluded places" such as Alaska and Patagonia.

"I'm very grateful I get to work and things are going well, but I can't remember the last time I had a week in nature by myself," Bravo says. "When you have one or two days off, you spend them rehearsing for the next project or doing press for the previous one. At some point, you're just in the hamster wheel, and unless you say stop, nobody else is going to."

But at some point soon, he adds, a break will be much needed: "It's hard to act in the world if you don't have time to contemplate it."

Medium hopes to connect with 'Live'

USA TODAY

Leading up to the premiere of his live Netflix series Tuesday night, renowned medium Tyler Henry experienced waves of excitement. He wants to reveal more about the process in which his sixth sense manifests through his first five senses.

"While sometimes I'll get a taste or a smell or get kind of more of an audible impression in my head, visions are the primary way of communication, very strong, active imaginations or day-dreams," he tells USA TODAY.

Henry also looks forward to addressing his skeptics with readings performed in real time. The curious check Google to see if he's real. A firsthand account of a reading in 2022 proved very popular with our readers.

"I think that in being able to see it without that editing is extremely powerful in a way even more than we've previously seen," the 28-year-old Henry says.

"Live From the Other Side With Tyler Henry," an eight-episode weekly series (Tuesdays, 6 p.m. EDT/3 p.m. PDT), follows five seasons of E's "Hollywood Medium" which introduced the Hanford, California native. Later Henry, who became aware of his ability at 10, and Netflix pooled their powers for one season of "Life After Death With Tyler Henry," in which he met with everyday people and tried to solve his own family mystery: How his mom, Theresa, ended up being raised by a woman evil enough to commit double homicide. Theresa learned only a few years ago that the woman is not her biological mother.

In "Live From the Other Side" Henry will be visited by celebrities accompanied by their friends and family whom they'd like to gift a reading with Henry. Their identities will be kept from Henry.

"A grade-school teacher that made an impact, or a friend or somebody who desperately needs a connection," Henry explains. Kind of like the ESP version of "Celebrity IOU."

"We, going live, will see what happens in real time with very little safeguards," Henry says with a laugh. "Which for skeptics is going to be really interesting to watch, and I think for believers could be very compelling if all goes as one hopes."

In Tuesday's premiere that was moderated by Amanda Kloots, guest Chrishell Stause brought her sister Shonda Davison, and friends including celebrity hairstylist Chris Appleton and television host Nina Parker.

Henry's premonitions bounced among guests during the 43-minute program, which was not short on tears.

Henry felt Stause's late mom's love for Stevie Nicks. He also was able to relieve Stause's regrets about the final words they shared.

"I hated my last conversation with her," Stause revealed. "Is that something that she thinks about?"

Henry assured the "Selling Sunset" star that her mother doesn't dwell on that chat. Parker became emotional when Henry connected her with a cousin who died in January at age 33.

But of course in life – even when you can connect with the dead – there are no guarantees.

"As a medium, there's a great fear of humiliation," Henry concedes. "There's a great risk of not only being wrong but looking fake, and this is an occupation where if people don't believe that what you're doing is real, they believe you are lying. So it's not just even so much an ideological thing about, 'I don't know about that. I don't really believe in that,' as much as it becomes a moral thing."

Fortunately for Henry, he has made it a habit to pursue the fears that shake him.

"I think that really there's something to be said about being able to have the courage to face discomfort and understand that is where growth exists," Henry says. "I hope that in taking those risks and embracing that it makes people look at their own life and think, 'Hey, what can I do to be more of who I am and not be afraid of being afraid?'"

In addition to "Live," Henry will continue his live tour, doing readings at theaters across the country. He also is devoting time to working on a book, co-written with his mother, centered on her turbulent upbringing "being abducted as a child and all of the crazy things she dealt with as having a homicidal mother figure who spent 30 years in prison," Henry says. "So very interesting story, and I'm excited to be able to work on that more."

TELEVISION PREVIEW

Bates' 'Matlock' reboot isn't just for older viewers

Kelly Lawler
Columnist
USA TODAY

Did you have "Kathy Bates plays a septuagenarian lawyer in a shockingly good 'Matlock' reboot on CBS" on your 2024 TV bingo card? Because I sure didn't!

But in this day and age on TV – with the chaos of streaming and the decline of traditional broadcast – there's no limit to the Mad-Libs-style shenanigans we'll see when it comes to what makes it on the air. And it's even more of a roll of the dice to find out which remake or reboot of the week is actually good and popular. Or, dare I say it, both!

So here we are, and here is Bates, venerated thespian and Oscar-winner, donning sensible suits and a legal notebook as Madeline "Matty" Matlock in, well, "Matlock" (sneak preview was Sunday, 8 EDT/PDT, moves to 9 EDT/PDT Thursdays on Oct. 17, ★★★★★). Bates, 76, is a doll, the cast is charming and the legal-plots-of-the-week are compelling. For those who miss a "Good Wife"-style procedural in their lives, it might just scratch an itch. And offer you a hard candy.

Because that's the whole shtick of "Matlock" this time around. Andy Griffith played a disarming and powerful defense attorney as Ben Matlock in the original 1986-1995 series, but Bates isn't whom you would pick as the most dominating lawyer in the room just by looking at her.

Her version of Matlock is a lawyer, too, but a corporate one, back in the workforce after long absent years due to personal trauma.

She wheedles her way into a fancy firm and starts showing the youngsters what's what, all while pursuing her own agenda.

Matty surprises not only the audience and her legal enemies but also her co-workers and superiors, including boss Olympia (Skye P. Marshall), a Black woman and top-notch attorney who has had to work harder than her peers to get where she is in her career. Olympia is constantly battling her ex-husband and firm nepo baby Julian (Jason Ritter, who does good smarm). Matty is a thorn in Olympia's side and a fresh career competition for junior associates Billy (David Del Rio) and Sarah (Leah Lewis). Watching the Madeline-instigated side-show with amused disinterest is the firm's head honcho Senior (Beau Bridges), who seems to hire Madeline as a private joke, but watches her closely.

It's a big cast but creator Jennie Snyder Urman ("Jane the Virgin," "Charmed") has balanced the ensemble well in the humorous and well-paced scripts. In the first two episodes made available for review, there's been time to get to know everyone and win two legal battles. The best procedurals can do both, and "Matlock," especially after its big twist, certainly has ambitions as big as some of our best procedurals.

When Max's "Hacks" – which stars Jean Smart, age 73 – won a boatload of Emmys last weekend, there was a lot of talk about making TV for and about people above a certain age. I'd argue that "Matlock" isn't just for the Boomers. It's yet more proof that stories about humans (and especially women) across the whole spectrum of our lives can be compelling. Matty Matlock can be a hero just like any of the young bucks on the latest Marvel show.

Great storytelling has no retirement age.

Johnson unveils bill to halt shutdown

Sets vote for Wed., days before funding runs out

REUTERS

WASHINGTON – House Speaker Mike Johnson, R-La., on Sunday proposed a three-month stopgap funding bill that excludes an immigration-related measure demanded by Donald Trump, as lawmakers look to avert a month-end partial government shutdown.

Johnson laid out the plan in a letter to colleagues released just eight days before the government's current $1.2 trillion in discretionary funding runs out on Sept. 30. The chamber will aim to vote on the measure on Wednesday, according to a source with knowledge of the plan.

Failure to act by then would furlough thousands of federal workers and shut down a wide swath of government operations weeks before the Nov. 5 election.

The proposal, which excludes a Trump demand to impose new requirements that people provide proof of citizenship to register to vote, is aligned with what Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., had urged: a basic extension of government funding to December.

"As history has taught and current polling affirms, shutting the government down less than 40 days from a fateful election would be an act of political malpractice," Johnson said in the letter.

The House, which Republicans control by a narrow 220-211 margin, last week rejected Johnson's prior proposal for a six-month funding extension including the voter-registration measure, which Democrats and democracy advocates call unnecessary as it is already illegal for non-citizens to vote in federal elections.

Congress faces an even more critical deadline on Jan. 1, 2025, by which time lawmakers will have to raise the nation's debt ceiling or risk defaulting on more than $35 trillion in federal government debt.

Hezbollah, Israel enter 'new phase'

BEIRUT – Hezbollah and Israel exchanged heavy fire into Sunday, as the Lebanese militant group sent rockets deep into northern Israeli territory after facing some of the most intense bombardment in almost a year of conflict.

Hezbollah deputy chief Naim Qassem told mourners at the funeral of one of the group's commanders killed last week in Beirut: "We have entered a new phase, the title of which is the open-ended battle of reckoning."

Israeli Defence Minister Yoav Gallant said operations would continue until it was safe for evacuated people on his side of the border to return – also setting the stage for a long conflict as Iran-backed Hezbollah has vowed to fight on until a ceasefire in the parallel Gaza war.

Israel's Chief of the General Staff Herzl Halevi said in a televised statement the military was well-prepared for the next stages of fighting, which were coming in the next few days, but did not say what this would entail.

"We will do whatever it takes to remove threats against Israel," Halevi said in a televised statement.

The conflict – which has escalated sharply in the past week – has raged since Hezbollah opened a second front against Israel, saying it was acting in support of Palestinians facing an Israeli offensive further south in Gaza.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, thousands of paggers and walkie-talkies used by Hezbollah members exploded. The attack was widely blamed on Israel, which has not confirmed or denied responsibility.

The following day, Israel launched its heaviest bombardment of Lebanon yet.

On Friday, an Israeli airstrike on Beirut's southern suburb targeted senior Hezbollah commanders in an attack that killed 45 people, according to the Lebanese health ministry. Hezbollah said 16 members of the group were among the dead, including senior leader Ibrahim Aqil and another commander, Ahmed Wahbi.

In a further intense bombardment on Saturday the Israeli military said it struck around 290 targets, including thousands of Hezbollah rocket launcher barrels.

"In recent days, we have inflicted a series of blows on Hezbollah that it never imagined," Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Sunday. "If Hezbollah has not understood the message, I promise you, it will understand the message."

Trump says he won't run in 2028

Says this year 'will be it' if he loses to Harris

REUTERS

WASHINGTON – Republican Donald Trump said that he will not make a fourth consecutive run for the presidency if he loses the Nov. 5 election, saying "that will be it" in an interview released on Sunday.

Asked if he saw himself running again in four years if he is not successful in his third consecutive bid for the White House, the 78-year-old former president told Sharyl Attkisson's "Full Measure" program: "No I don't. I think that will be – that will be it. I don't see that at all. Hopefully, we will be successful."

Trump faces a tight race against Vice President Kamala Harris, with polls showing the two neck-and-neck in key battleground states that are likely to be decisive in determining the winner, even as Harris has begun to edge up in nationwide polls.

Trump launched his first reelection bid for the 2020 election the same day he was inaugurated in 2017 and announced his latest White House bid two years ago in November 2022.

Harris pushes for 2nd debate

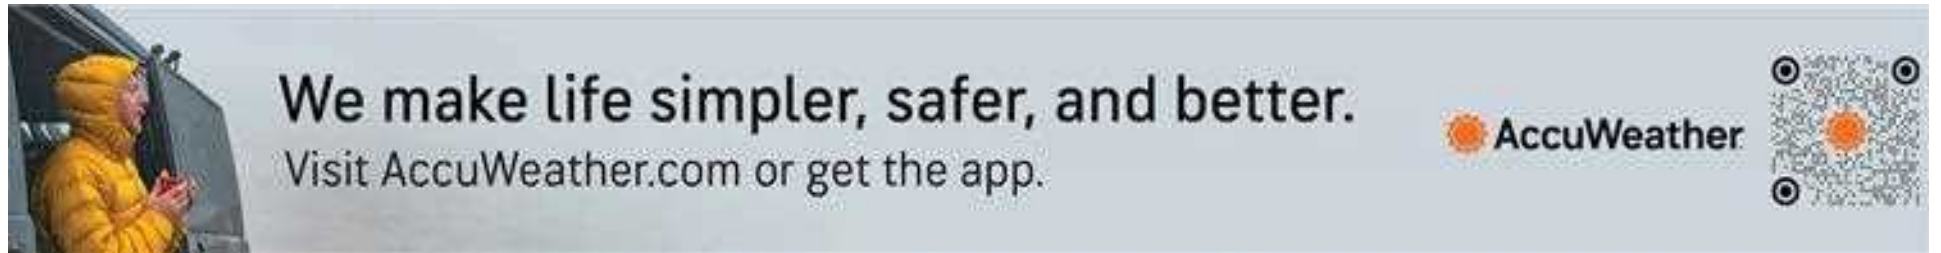

Vice President Kamala Harris on Sunday said her Republican rival Donald Trump should accept the proposal for a new debate on CNN next month as Election Day nears.

Former President Trump on Saturday rejected doing another debate with his Democratic opponent after Harris' campaign said she had agreed to an Oct. 23 matchup.

"He should accept because I feel very strongly that we owe it to the American people and to the voters to meet once more before Election Day," Harris told supporters at a fundraiser in New York City.

A representative for Trump's campaign referred to the presidential candidate's comments at a rally on Saturday when asked about Harris' remarks.

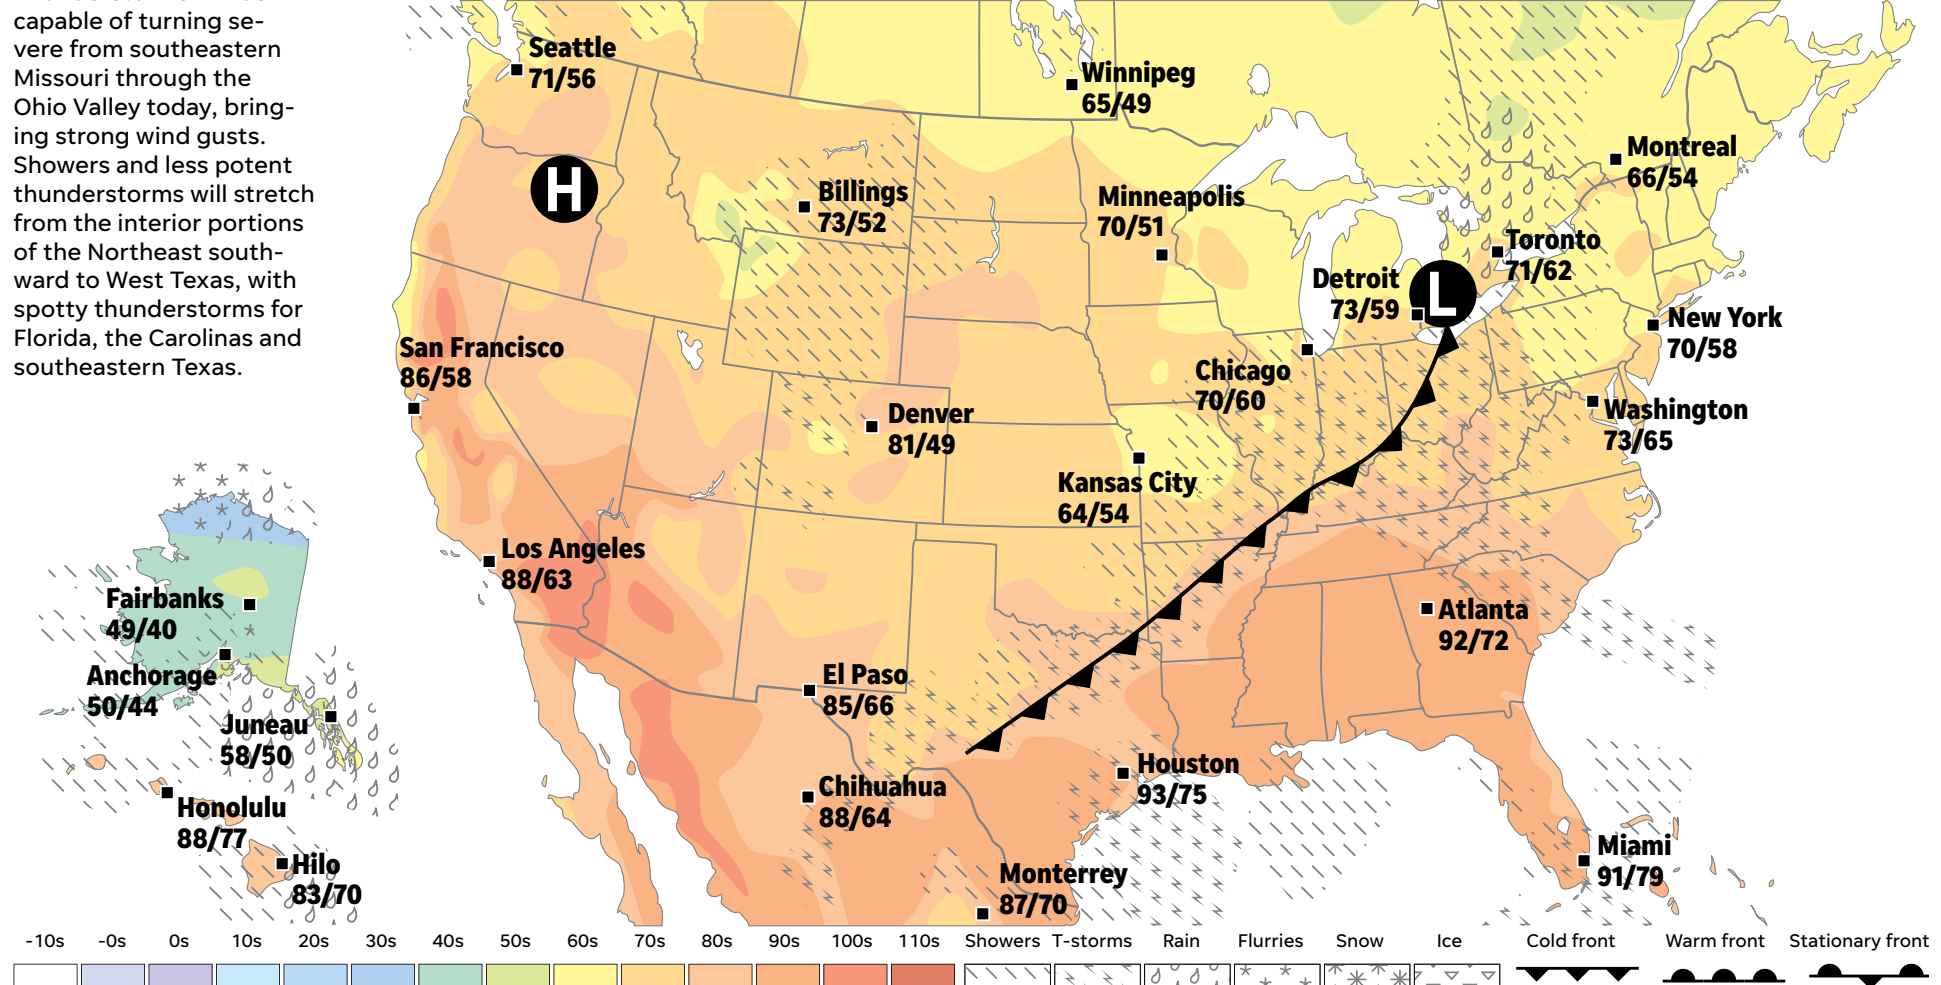

Speaking to supporters at a North Carolina rally on Saturday, Trump said: "The problem with another debate is that it's just too late. Voting has already started."

WALL STREET WEEK AHEAD

Investors eye data, election, earnings

Lewis Krauskopf

NEW YORK – A roaring rally in U.S. stocks will face a gauntlet of economic data, looming political uncertainty and a corporate earnings test in coming weeks as investors navigate one of the most volatile periods of the year for equity markets.

The benchmark S&P 500 last week hit its first closing all-time high in two months after the Federal Reserve unveiled a hefty 50-basis point rate cut, kicking off the first U.S. monetary easing cycle since 2020.

The index is up 0.8% so far in September, historically the weakest month for stocks, and has gained 19% year-to-date. But the rocky period could carry over until the Nov. 5 election, strategists said, leaving the S&P 500 vulnerable to market swings.

“We’re entering that period where seasonality has been a bit less favorable,” said Angelo Kourkafas, senior investment strategist at Edward Jones. “Despite the excitement about the start of the new rate-cutting cycle, it could still be a bumpy road ahead.”

The second half of September is historically the weakest two-week period of the year for the S&P 500, according to a Ned Davis Research analysis of data since 1950.

The index has also logged an average 0.45% decline in October during presidential years, data from CFRA going back to 1945 showed.

Volatility also tends to pick up in October in election years, with the Cboe Market Volatility index rising to an average level of 25 at the start of the month, as opposed to its long-term average of 19.2, according to an Edward Jones analysis of the past eight presidential election years. The VIX was recently at 16.4.

The market could be particularly sensitive to this year’s close election between Republican Donald Trump and Democrat Kamala Harris.

“Unless the data deteriorates considerably, we think U.S. elections will start to be more at the forefront,” UBS equity derivative strategists said in a note.

Investors are also looking for data to support expectations that the economy is navigating a “soft landing,” during which inflation moderates without badly hurting growth. Stocks fare much better after the start of rate cuts in such a scenario, as opposed to when the Fed cuts during recessions.

This week includes reports on manufacturing, consumer confidence and durable goods, as well as the personal consumption expenditures price index, a key inflation measure.

Attention will be squarely on employment after Fed Chair Jerome Powell said the central bank wanted to stay ahead of any weakening in the job market as the Fed announced its cut last week. The closely watched monthly jobs report is due on Oct. 4.

“We’re going to have hyper-focus on anything that speaks to the strength of the labor force,” said Art Hogan, chief market strategist at B Riley Wealth.

Meanwhile, the rally in stocks has pushed up valuations. The S&P 500 has a price-to-earnings ratio of 21.4 times expected 12-month earnings, well above its long-term average of 15.7, according to LSEG Datastream.

With the scope for valuations to go higher now more limited, investors said that puts a greater burden on corporate earnings to be strong in order to support stock gains.

Third-quarter reporting season kicks off next month. S&P 500 earnings for the period are expected to have climbed 5.4% from the prior year, and then jump nearly 13% in the fourth quarter, according to LSEG IBES.

FedEx shares tumbled on Friday after the delivery giant reported a steep quarterly profit drop and lowered its full-year revenue forecast.

“Extended multiples put pressure on macro data and fundamentals to support S&P 500 prices,” Scott Chronert, head of U.S. equity strategy at Citi, said in a report.

Harris to speak this week on economic proposals

Likely to include plans to lower costs, make housing more affordable

WASHINGTON – Vice President Kamala Harris plans to roll out a new set of economic policies this week that aim to help Americans build wealth and set economic incentives for businesses to aid that goal, three sources with knowledge of the matter said.

The new policies, which have not been previously reported and could be announced in Pittsburgh on Wednesday, come as undecided voters continue to ask for more information about how Harris would help them economically if she were elected president in November, including those in critical swing states, the sources said.

Harris, speaking to reporters on Sunday after Reuters reported the expected rollout, said she would outline her vision for the economy in a speech this week.

She added that the plan is about investing in the aspirations and ambitions of the American people while addressing the challenges they face.

The rollout would follow heated debate in Democratic circles over whether releasing more economic policies so close to election day is a smart strategy.

“It’s not just about affordability, it’s also about showing (voters) they have a path to building wealth,” said one of the sources with direct knowledge of Harris’s economic plans, adding she wanted to show Americans how they can “get a foot in the door.”

None of the sources would provide specific details on the expected new policies, and the Harris campaign would not comment on any new proposals. However, Harris’ 2020 presidential run and President Joe Biden’s administration included plans with similar goals.

In her 2020 campaign, Harris proposed significant pay hikes for the millions of public school teachers, forcing companies to disclose their pay gap between men and women and penalizing those who are not narrowing it. The Biden and Harris administration have pushed to eliminate bias in home appraisals and use the more than $700 billion federal contracting budget to buoy minority businesses.

expenses, childcare and goods. Her plans often build on Biden’s policies, like increasing the child tax credit and lifting the corporate tax rate to 28%.

Campaign spokesperson James Singer did not comment on the story. He told Reuters that Harris “will continue to present her opportunity economy agenda to lower costs, make housing more affordable, and spur economic growth across America.”

Releasing new economic policy with less than 50 days left in a tight presidential election race could mean the new measures never reach crucial voters, some advisers acknowledge.

“Typically you’d see a campaign wrap up persuading voters by September and move to mobilizing people but this is not a typical campaign,” said a source with knowledge of the new plans, referring to Harris’ jump to the top of the ticket in late July. “We have to continue persuading and mobilizing folks at the same time until the very end.”

Republican Donald Trump’s ecoomic proposals aimed at working-class Americans include eliminating taxes on tips and Social Security benefits, opening up federal lands to housing construction and deporting millions of immigrants to the country who Republicans say are driving up costs.

The former president has also proposed new across-the-board tariffs on goods not made in the U.S. that could raise costs for American consumers and inflation, but that is backed by a slim majority of voters.

Trump has tried to pin on Democrats inflation that popped globally as the COVID-19 pandemic shutdowns eased and has made the still-high cost of groceries, particularly bacon, a rally speech staple.

From 2019 to 2023, the food Consumer Price Index rose by 25%, the U.S. Department of Agriculture reported.

Some Harris supporters have urged the campaign to double down on the economic message that is already out there instead of rolling out new ideas.

“My recommendation is to do more show-and-tells. Rather than address this with endless white papers, go to grocery stores and apartment buildings and more,” said Donna Brazile, a longtime Democratic strategist.

“Inflation may have gone down, but the cost of living hasn’t changed. Some of this is post pandemic and that still must be addressed,” she said.

Many of Harris’ proposals would require congressional approval, and would be unlikely to pass unless Democrats win both the House and Senate.

US to propose ban on Chinese software, hardware vehicles

David Shepardson

WASHINGTON – The Commerce Department is expected on Monday to propose prohibiting Chinese software and hardware in connected and autonomous vehicles on American roads due to national security concerns, two sources told Reuters.

The Biden administration has raised serious concerns about the collection of data by Chinese companies on U.S. drivers and infrastructure as well as the potential foreign manipulation of vehicles connected to the internet and navigation systems.

The proposed regulation would ban the import and sale of vehicles from China with key communications or automated driving system software or hardware, said the two sources, who declined to be identified because the decision had not been publicly disclosed. The move is a significant escalation in the United States’ ongoing restrictions on Chinese vehicles, software and components. The Biden administration recently locked in steep tariff hikes on Chinese imports, including a 100% duty on electric vehicles as well as new hikes on EV batteries and key minerals.

Commerce Secretary Gina Raimondo said in May the risks of Chinese software or hardware in connected U.S. vehicles were significant.

“You can imagine the most catastrophic outcome theoretically if you had a couple million cars on the road and the software were disabled,” she said. President Joe Biden in February ordered an investigation into whether Chinese vehicle imports pose national security risks over connected-car technology – and if that software and hardware should be banned in all vehicles on U.S. roads.

“China’s policies could flood our market with its vehicles, posing risks to our national security,” Biden said earlier. “I’m not going to let that happen on my watch.”

The Commerce Department plans to give the public 30 days to comment before any finalization of the rules, the sources said.

Nearly all newer vehicles on U.S. roads are considered “connected.” Such vehicles have onboard network hardware that allows internet access, allowing them to share data with devices both inside and outside the vehicle.

The department also plans to propose making the prohibitions on software effective in the 2027 model year and the ban on hardware would take effect in January 2029 or the 2030 model year.

The prohibitions in question would include vehicles with certain Bluetooth, satellite and wireless features as well as highly autonomous vehicles that could operate without a driver behind the wheel. A bipartisan group of U.S. lawmakers in November raised alarm about Chinese auto and tech companies collecting and handling sensitive data while testing autonomous vehicles in the United States.

The prohibitions would extend to other foreign U.S. adversaries, including Russia, the sources said.

IN BRIEF

4 aides to NC gubernatorial candidate quit campaign

Four top aides to North Carolina's Republican candidate for governor resigned Sunday, three days after CNN reported that he once called himself a "black NAZI!" and proposed bringing back slavery in comments posted on a pornography website.

Lt. Gov. Mark Robinson, 56, who is Black and denied making the comments, announced that his campaign manager, finance director, deputy campaign manager and senior advisor stepped down from their roles with the campaign without saying why.

The departures further unsettle Robinson's campaign with 45 days to go. He is running against Democratic candidate Josh Stein, the state's attorney general.

The North Carolina Republican Party stood by Robinson in a statement on Friday, but Trump did not mention him during a campaign rally Saturday in Wilmington.

Biden expected to meet Vietnam president this week, source says

WASHINGTON – President Joe Biden is expected to meet Vietnam's President and ruling Communist Party chief To Lam on Wednesday, a person familiar with the matter told Reuters.

The meeting is expected to take place on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly in New York.

The White House had no immediate comment. A Vietnamese foreign ministry spokesperson previously had not said whether Lam would meet Biden during the trip.

Last September, Biden visited Vietnam and secured deals on semiconductors and minerals and an upgrade to Hanoi's highest diplomatic status, alongside China and Russia.

40% of regions, companies lack emissions-cut goals, survey says

SINGAPORE – More than 40% of major companies, cities and regions have still not set any targets to cut greenhouse gas emissions, according to an annual "stocktake" released on Monday to gauge global progress in the fight against catastrophic climate change.

While more governments and enterprises have issued net-zero pledges since last year, their attention has been further diverted by wars, elections and economic challenges, leaving a significant "commitment gap", said Net Zero Tracker, a coalition of research groups at the University of Oxford.

The total number of companies with no emissions targets dropped to 495, from 734 last year. They include electric vehicle makers Tesla and BYD, Nintendo and Berkshire Hathaway, Net Zero Tracker said.

The report cited Costa Rica, Volvo and Google owner Alphabet as examples of "good practice" when it comes to implementing net-zero pledges.

At least 31 dead in Iran coal mine blast, state media reports

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates – A gas explosion in a coal mine in Iran's South Khorasan Province killed at least 31 people and injured 16, the country's interior minister Eskandar Momeni told state media on Sunday.

Local media had reported earlier in the day that 51 people were killed following the accident they said was caused by a methane gas explosion in two blocks, B and C, of the privately-owned mine operated by the Madanjoo company.

Momeni added that 17 miners were still missing and their fate remained unknown as rescue teams were still approaching their likely location.

There were 69 workers in the blocks at the time of the explosion, state TV reported.

UN adopts pact that aims to save global cooperation

Leaders warn of growing mistrust among nations

UNITED NATIONS – United Nations Secretary-General António Guterres launched a two-day, climate-themed "Summit for the Future" on Sunday as part of the U.N. General Assembly, where some leaders warned of growing mistrust between nations as climate-fueled disasters mount.

National leaders addressed the group after adopting a "Pact for the Future" aimed at ensuring and increasing cooperation between nations, with many calling for urgent access to more climate finance.

"International challenges are moving faster than our ability to solve them," Guterres told leaders at the summit. "Crises are interacting and feeding off each other – for example, as digital technologies spread climate disinformation, that deepens distrust and fuels polarization."

Barbados Prime Minister Mia Mottley echoed Guterres' warning and urged a "reset" in how global institutions are governed so they can better respond to crises and serve those most in need.

"The distress in our institutions of governance, the mistrust between the governors and the governed, will continue to foster social alienation the world over at the very time that we need to find as many people as possible to shape a new world," Mottley said.

On Monday, the U.N. climate summit continues with speeches from China, India, and the United States.

Also this week, President Joe Biden is expected to deliver a speech at an event also attended by actor and climate activist Jane Fonda and World Bank President Ajay Banga, among others. Another event hosted by the Clinton Foundation features speeches by Prince Harry, Duke of Sussex, and actor and water activist Matt Damon.

Climate summits and events like Climate Week, held alongside the U.N. General Assembly, have taken on a more urgent tone in recent years as rising temperatures fuel increasingly extreme disasters like heatwaves and storms.

Some observers to climate negotiations regretted that the global pact adopted Sunday morning by the General Assembly did not go further than last year's COP28 summit in Dubai in affirming a commitment to transition away from fossil fuel use.

Countries are showing "collective amnesia" about the need to tackle these polluting fuels, said Alden Meyer, a senior associate at the climate think tank E3G.

Leaders have also been grappling with a more urgent challenge on the climate agenda. There are just two months left until November's COP29 climate summit in Baku, Azerbaijan, leaving little time for agreeing on a new global finance target to replace the annual $100 billion pledge that expires in 2025.

With some U.N. agencies estimating the annual financing need in the Zelenskyy seeks 'truly just peace' for Ukraine

Elaine Monaghan
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy arrived in the United States on Sunday to attend sessions at the U.N. General Assembly and urged his partners to help achieve "a shared victory for a truly just peace."

"This fall will determine the future of this war," he said in a post on X alongside his nightly video address, delivered from a plane he said was en route to Pennsylvania. Ukrainian media later reported he had arrived in New York. He is also due to visit Washington, D.C., later in the week.

Zelenskyy did not say what his plans were in Pennsylvania, but the state is home to a munitions plant in President Joe Biden's hometown of Scranton.

The Ukrainian leader's concerns about a shortage of such munitions have taken on added urgency as Russia pummels Ukraine's energy grid ahead of the critical winter months.

In his video, Zelenskyy said Ukraine was doing everything it could, by acquiring weapons and through diplomacy, "to consolidate our partners' support and force Russia into peace."

The Ukrinform state news agency reported separately that Zelenskyy had arrived in New York and that he would meet heads of U.S. companies to discuss his country's energy needs as well as leaders of states and international organizations on Sunday.

Zelenskyy's visit coincides with U.S. efforts to prepare a $375M military aid package for Ukraine, breaking a trend toward smaller packages for Kyiv's military operations.

Zelenskyy said he would present a "victory plan" in Ukraine's war against Russia first to Biden. He is also expected to discuss the plan with Vice President Kamala Harris, as well as with other world leaders.

Zelenskyy also hopes to meet GOP presidential candidate Donald Trump. Trump has said he will probably meet with Zelenskyy this week but no date has been announced.

trillions, leaders are looking beyond their own budgets for ways to boost climate cash.

The World Bank and other multilateral development banks are undergoing reform processes this year, which could see them making more funding available or taking on more climate-related risk.

Under an initiative led by Barbados, France and Kenya, countries also continue to discuss imposing new global taxes to help pay for climate finance, such as a financial transaction tax or a shipping tax.

British Commonwealth Secretary General Patricia Scotland noted that some of the world's poorest countries were now facing climate-fueled disasters along with an increased debt burden.

"We have to do more to understand the fundamental unfairness of the debt crisis that most of our developing countries are going through," Scotland told Reuters. "The development banks and the World Bank have to step up to that reality."

India's Modi rallies Indian Americans, calls 2024 'very important' year

REUTERS

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi rallied the Indian community in the U.S. on Sunday, citing the power of the diaspora ahead of the Nov. 5 presidential election along with the importance of the 2024 contest and democracy in general.

Modi, speaking at a packed coliseum in New York's Long Island suburbs that also featured Indian dancing and songs, did not comment specifically on the contest between Democratic Vice President Kamala Harris and former Republican President Donald Trump.

"This year 2024 is a very important one for the entire world," he said, according to a translation of his remarks.

"On the one hand, there are conflicts raging between several countries in the world, there is tension. And on the other, democracy is being celebrated in several countries of the world," Modi told the crowd. "India and Amer-identify as being of Indian descent, according to 2020 U.S. census data.

Trump has said he will meet with Modi this week.

He faces a tight race against Harris, who is of Indian descent.

Modi secured his own historic third term earlier this year and was sworn in as prime minister of the world's most populous nation in June following a shock election setback that left him facing the potential challenges of a coalition government after an election campaign marked by religious rhetoric.

Modi and President Joe Biden met in Delaware over the weekend one-on-one as well as part of the Quad grouping that also includes the leaders of Australia and Japan.

While a U.S. official declined to say whether human rights issues were raised in the Biden-Modi talks, senior U.S. officials met with Sikh advocates ahead of the Biden-Modi meeting to discuss threats they face in the U.S.

4 dead in Alabama mass shooting

More than a dozen are wounded Saturday evening rampage

John Bacon
USA TODAY

At least four people were killed, more than a dozen were wounded and an intensive search was underway Sunday in Birmingham, Alabama, for the people who fired into a crowd in the city's entertainment district in what the police chief described as a "hit."

Chief Scott Thurmond said two males and a female died at the scene Saturday night and a fourth male died a short time later at a local hospital. He said about 17 people were wounded. First responders rushed some of them to hospitals while others traveled to hospitals around the city on their own.

Thurmond said the shooters rolled up in a vehicle at around 11 p.m., got out and fired into the crowd on the streets in the Five Points South district, a popular area of shops, bars and restaurants. The shooters then fled the scene, where more than 100 shell casings were found, he said.

The victims included the person who was targeted, he said, but added that he did not know the motive for the killing.

"We believe there was a hit, if you will, on that particular person," he said.

Thurmond said no arrests had been made and investigators were viewing video surveillance recordings for clues. The FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives were assisting in the investigation.

Thurmond urged the public to provide any information they might have. Tips leading to an arrest could pay up to $5,000, authorities said.

"It's going to take everyone to work together to get these individuals off the streets who inflicted this carnage on our city last night," Thurmond said. "No one in our city wants these people on our streets."

Birmingham Mayor Randall Woodfin said a Glock "switch," which converts semiautomatic handguns into automatic weapons, had been used.

"This is not the first occasion, unfortunately, in 2024 where we've seen the style of weapons, the number of bullets on the scene ... automatic weapons being used in our streets," Woodfin said.

The devices are banned by federal law. Legislators have pushed to codify the ban under state law, but that effort fell short in the last state legislative session.

"We need the necessary tools," Woodfin said.

Dajon Singleton told WBMA-TV he was driving into the area when he saw the emergency response and chaos on the streets as people ran and screamed. He saw five or six people taken away on stretchers, he said.

"Very devastating, sad," he said. "The grieving-type screaming. ... That's when I instantly knew someone lost a loved one."

Speaking at Aqil's funeral on Sunday, Qassem said Israel was seeking to paralyze the group, but would not succeed.

Qassem said Israel's escalation of the conflict would lead to further displacement of its own citizens.

Israel has closed schools, restricted gatherings in the north and ordered hospitals there to move patients and staff to protected areas — many have secured or underground facilities designed to withstand rocket fire.

Air raid sirens sounded constantly in Israel on Sunday. About 150 rockets, cruise missiles and drones were fired at Israel overnight and into Sunday, most of which were intercepted by air defenses, the military said.

Several buildings were struck, including a house badly damaged near the city of Haifa. Rescue teams treated wounded but there were no reports of deaths. Residents had been instructed to stay near bomb shelters and safe rooms.

Hezbollah said it hit a barracks and another Israeli position with squadrons of attack drones and also launched rockets at military-industrial facilities in an "initial response" to last week's device attacks.

Meanwhile, the pro-Iranian Islamic Resistance in Iraq militant group said Sunday it had launched a drone attack on a target in the Israeli-occupied Jordan Valley.

Islamic Resistance in Iraq vowed to escalate its attacks.

In a statement, the Israeli military said interceptors were launched towards a UAV (drone) that was launched from Iraq and was identified crossing from Syria into Israeli territory. No injuries were reported.

The pro-Iranian militant group said its drones hit a location in the Jordan Valley in the "occupied Palestinian territories" but did not elaborate.

The U.N. special coordinator in Lebanon, Jeanine Hennis-Plasscharet, said in a post on X that "with the region on the brink of an imminent catastrophe, it cannot be overstated enough: there is NO military solution that will make either side safer."

Lebanon's top Christian cleric, Bechara Boutros al-Rai, said in his Sunday sermon that Lebanon was "deeply saddened" by the casualties among civilians and within Hezbollah in the attacks of the past week, in a rare condolence message by a Christian leader to the group.

"We direct an appeal to the (United Nations Security Council) to put an end to this war by all available means," Rai said.

Tens of thousands of people have left their homes on both sides of the Israel-Lebanon border since Hezbollah began firing rockets at Israel in October.

Israel has faced fierce international criticism for the humanitarian crisis brought on by its nearly one-year offensive against the Hamas militant group in Gaza.

Most of Gaza's population has been displaced. An estimated 1 million people — half the population — are currently crammed into a designated humanitarian zone that makes up less than 15% of the territory and is lacking essential infrastructure and services, according to the United Nations.

Humanitarian access to northern Gaza, where estimates of the population run between 300,000 and 500,000 people — is especially difficult, according to the United Nations.

The Gaza conflict was triggered on Oct. 7 when Hamas attacked Israel, killing 1,200 people and taking about 250 hostages, according to Israeli tallies.

Israel's subsequent assault on the Gaza Strip has killed more than 41,300 Palestinians, according to the local health ministry, and laid waste to the enclave.

Some inmates pin hopes on clemency before Biden leaves office

Sarah N. Lynch

WASHINGTON — Michael Montalvo has served 37 years in federal prison for leading a criminal enterprise that sold tens of millions of dollars' worth of cocaine in California. And during that time, he has earned a law degree and helped other inmates obtain their freedom through a program called compassionate release.

But due to a quirk in the law, the 78-year-old Vietnam War veteran is barred from seeking compassionate release himself. He has two options to get out of prison: death or persuading President Joe Biden to grant him clemency.

Montalvo is one of more than 7,000 federal inmates asking Biden to use this power to release them from prison before the end of his term.

Montalvo

"Mr. Montalvo poses no danger to society," his lawyers wrote in his clemency petition, noting he was not accused of violence. "Clemency is the only remedy available to correct his sentence."

When Montalvo was convicted of "continuing a criminal enterprise," he was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. A similar conviction today would most likely lead to a far less stringent sentence, his lawyers said.

Montalvo is part of a small and often forgotten subset of the 158,000 federal inmates who were convicted of crimes committed before November 1987, when the federal parole system was abolished and replaced with new U.S. sentencing guidelines.

The U.S. government says it does not keep track of the number of inmates, including Montalvo, who are serving sentences of life without the possibility of parole, but Berkeley Law professor Charles Weisselberg estimates there are somewhere between 100 and 400.

When Congress amended the law in 2018 to make it easier for aging or ill inmates to be freed through compassionate release by petitioning a federal court, it did not account for people incarcerated under the earlier system.

Criminal justice advocates say they believe that exclusion was unintentional.

In 2021, Sens. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., and Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, introduced the Safer Detention Act to address these issues, but the bill did not pass.

Weisselberg said he believes everyone serving a sentence under the parole system should be granted clemency.

Since Biden took office in 2021, the White House has pardoned 25 people and commuted sentences for 131 people, according to Justice Department data.

The White House has not said what Biden's priorities might be in using his power of clemency in his last months in office.

A White House spokesperson said Biden remains "committed to reforming our criminal justice system" and continues to evaluate clemency requests "in a thoughtful and deliberative manner."

SpaceX plans to send uncrewed missions to Mars

SpaceX plans to launch about five uncrewed Starship missions to Mars in two years, CEO Elon Musk said on Sunday in a post on social media platform X.

Earlier this month, Musk said the first Starships to Mars would launch in two years "when the next Earth-Mars transfer window opens."

The CEO on Sunday said the first crewed mission timeline will depend upon the success of uncrewed flights. If the uncrewed missions land safely, crewed missions will be launched in four years. However, in case of challenges, crewed missions will be postponed by another two years, Musk said.

Musk, known for providing changing timelines on Starship's readiness, said earlier this year the first uncrewed starship to land on Mars would be within five years, with the first people landing on Mars within seven years.

In June, a Starship rocket survived a fiery, hypersonic return from space and achieved a breakthrough landing demonstration in the Indian Ocean, completing a full test mission around the globe on the rocket's fourth try.

Musk is counting on Starship to fulfill his goal of producing a large, multipurpose next-generation spacecraft capable of sending people and cargo to the moon later this decade, and ultimately flying to Mars.

NASA earlier this year delayed Artemis 3 mission and its first crewed moon landing in half a century using SpaceX's Starship, to September 2026. It was previously planned for late 2025, NASA said.

Japanese billionaire Yusaku Maezawa in June canceled a private mission around the moon he had paid for, which was to have used SpaceX's Starship, citing schedule uncertainties in the rocket's development.

New polls: Harris gains ground in race

NBC, CBS surveys show larger boost in favor

REUTERS

WASHINGTON – Vice President Kamala Harris leads Republican rival Donald Trump by 5 percentage points in an NBC News poll released Sunday that found that respondents have come to see her more favorably since she emerged as the Democratic candidate for president.

Asked about their views of Harris since she became the nominee, 48% of 1,000 registered voters surveyed said it was positive compared to 32% in July – the largest jump among politician ratings polled by NBC since President George W. Bush’s favorability rose after the attacks on Sept. 11, 2001.

Asked about Trump, 40% of those polled said they viewed him positively compared to 38% in July, the news network said. The poll, conducted Sept. 13-17, has a margin of error of 3 percentage points.

A separate CBS News poll also found Harris leading Trump, by 4 percentage points, 52% to 48%, among likely voters, with a margin of error rate of plus or minus 2 percentage points.

The findings are broadly in line with other recent national polls, including those by Reuters/Ipsos, that show a close contest heading into the Nov. 5 election.

Trump, 78, continues to falsely blame on widespread voter fraud while facing federal and state criminal charges over efforts to overturn the election results.

to serve as president in the nation’s 248-year history.

“She’s been able to change this from a race that was a referendum on Joe Biden to a race that is a referendum on Donald Trump,” Amy Walter, publisher and editor in chief of the nonpartisan Cook Political Report, told NBC’s “Meet the Press.”

In CBS’ poll of 3,129 registered voters surveyed Sept. 18-20, Harris edged up 2 percentage points after a 50-50 split in August, shored by her performance in the Sept. 10 debate and brightening economic news.

Harris’ abortion rights bus tour spreads out

Aims for votes the big rallies don’t reach

Gabriella Borter

ALLENTOWN, Pa. – An intimate crowd gathered around a blue bus and listened intently while Hadley Duvall, an abortion rights advocate and a supporter of Kamala Harris’ presidential campaign, told how she was raped and impregnated by her stepfather at age 12.

Duvall ultimately had a miscarriage but said that under new abortion laws in her home state of Kentucky, she would have been forced to carry the pregnancy to term.

Aleyda Garcia, 53, held a Harris campaign sign in Spanish and teared up. Her son Brandon Rodriguez, 18, wiped a drop from his mother’s cheek. A first-time voter, he had yet to decide between Harris, a Democrat, and the Republican Donald Trump.

Duvall’s story, part of the Harris campaign’s “Reproductive Freedom” bus tour, made Garcia think of her granddaughters.

“You never know when something can happen like that,” Garcia said. “I want them to have a choice.”

Reuters followed the bus tour for two days in Pennsylvania. Most who showed up support Harris while a few, like Rodriguez, came to hear more about her. Voters like him make up the small group who could swing the Nov. 5 election.

Democrats see abortion rights as a popular issue for Harris to use against Trump, a Republican who while president appointed three Supreme Court justices who in 2022 helped overturn the 1973 Roe v. Wade ruling that had legalized abortion nationwide.

A Reuters/Ipsos poll conducted from August 21-28 found a majority of voters, including 34% of Republicans, want the next president to protect or increase abortion access.

Trump says he backs abortion rights in circumstances of rape, incest or when a mother’s life is in danger but says it’s up to each state to decide for itself, and some allow no exceptions. He denies Democrats’ assertions he plans to sign into law a national ban on abortions.

The bus will make at least 50 stops that began with a few laps around Trump’s Florida home in West Palm Beach. It will hit all seven battleground states expected to decide the election. The aim is to take the fight to small-town and neighborhood voters that big rallies will not reach.

Spokespeople hop off and on the bus and include Harris’ husband Doug Emhoff, actors, influencers, local radio hosts, podcasters and senators. Stops include colleges, health centers and beer halls in places like Allentown, Pennsylvania, population 126,000.

“You can get into communities that you don’t get to as easily with principals flying in and out,” said Morgan Mohr, senior campaign adviser for reproduc-

Harris has vowed to bring back Roe’s protections, although to do so she would likely need a Democratic majority in both houses of Congress – a long shot in the 2024 election.

In Allentown, a left-leaning city whose population is more than 50% Latino, the campaign gave out empanadas to appeal to a demographic group that Democrats have been losing ground with in recent years.

Honduran-born Garcia, a Democratic voter since she became a citizen, heard about the event that morning on a local Spanish-language radio station.

Garcia said she brought her son, who works at an amusement park, so he could hear from the campaign and make an informed voting decision.

“I think I’ll probably vote for Harris,” Rodriguez said, after the program ended. He said he still found Trump funny, but didn’t want him to be president again.

voter fraud and faces federal and state criminal charges over efforts to overturn the election results.

He denies any wrongdoing and has cast his indictments as a political attack against him while embracing increasingly dystopian rhetoric if he were to lose in 2024.

He has also launched a number of businesses ventures amid his latest campaign, including Trump Media, NFTs, and Trump-branded sneakers, coins and cryptocurrency.

Harris, 59, meanwhile, has cast the race as a critical moment for U.S. democracy even as she seeks to focus on kitchen-table issues such as costs for families and housing.

Asked whether the four year break helped him regroup and figure out who he could trust as allies, Trump said: “It would have been easier if I did it ... contiguous.”

“But the benefit is more than anything else, it shows how bad they were,” he added.

Trump, who spoke with Attkisson at his Florida resort, also said it was “too early” to make deals with people for any position in his White House cabinet should he win in November.

“I think that will be – that will be it. I don’t see that at all. Hopefully, we will be successful.”

Georgia holds off Texas atop coaches poll

Eddie Timanus
USA TODAY

The upper echelon of the US LBM Coaches Poll after college football's Week 4 remains largely unchanged this week. That will likely not be the case next week with the season's first top-five showdown on the horizon.

Georgia remains No. 1, receiving 35 of 55 first-place votes cast this week. The Bulldogs had an open date to prepare for next week's trip to No. 4 Alabama, which was also idle over the weekend. No. 2 Texas, which easily handled UL-Monroe on Saturday, closes the gap a little more picking up 18 first-place nods. The remaining two firsts went to No. 3 Ohio State, which opens Big Ten competition next week at Michigan State.

Ole Miss stays put at No. 5 as Tennessee nudges ahead of Oregon at No. 6, giving the SEC five of the top six teams in the poll this week. The news wasn't all good for the league, however, as Missouri slips from a tie for eighth to No. 11 after needing overtime to escape Vanderbilt. Penn State, Miami (Fla.) and Utah now round out the top 10.

Michigan makes the week's biggest gain within the rankings, gaining five spots to check in at No. 12 after upending Southern Cal, knocking the Trojans down four slots to No. 16.

Kansas State tumbles 11 positions to No. 25 after a late-night drubbing at Brigham Young, which moves into the poll at No. 22. No. 21 Illinois also joins the rankings after taking down Nebraska in overtime Friday night.

The Cornhuskers and Memphis are the week's dropouts.

MLB

White Sox tie MLB record with 120th loss

Gabe Lacques
USA TODAY

It took more than half a century, but the 1962 New York Mets have company.

For 62 years, the first team in that franchise's history was also the biggest loser in Major League Baseball's record books. But these 2024 Chicago White Sox are now eye with Casey Stengel's expansion Mets in the toilet bowl of history – and about to plumb the depths even further.

The White Sox lost their 120th game Sunday, their 4-2 defeat to the San Diego Padres equaling the '62 Mets for most setbacks in a single season.

Now, the White Sox are 36-120 and heading home with six more chances for that 121st loss to stand alone in history's loss column. They do have one bar they can hope to clear: The 1916 Philadelphia Athletics' .235 winning percentage is the worst in modern baseball history. The White Sox are currently at .232.

Yet, at this point, all the ignominy feels inevitable. Chicago has endured losing streaks of 21, 14 and 12 games this season, and finishes the season with series against the Los Angeles Angels and Detroit Tigers. The White Sox are 1-9 this year against the Tigers alone, a big reason why they're a mind-boggling 8-41 against American League Central foes this season.

That 21-game skid spanning July and August resulted in the firing of manager Pedro Grifol, who went 28-89 this season and 89-190 these past two seasons. They decimated their putrid roster even further at the July 30 trade deadline, dealing pitchers Erick Fedde and Michael Kopech, and outfielders Eloy Jimenez and Tommy Pham to contenders, making life no easier for interim manager Grady Sizemore.

But make no mistake: This outcome is very much a case of systemic rot, nothing no manager, interim or permanent, or player could have realistically prevented.

This was the first full season under GM Chris Getz after longtime club president Kenny Williams and former GM Rick Hahn were let go in August 2023. While the club did make playoff appearances in pandemic-shortened 2020 and 2021, the club became unmoored under venerable manager Tony La Russa and Grifol.

A long history of disinvestment in free agents – current outfielder Andrew Benintendi's $75 million contract is the largest in team history, and he's been worth -0.8 WAR in his two seasons – and behind-the-curve efforts in drafting and player development left the organization largely barren.

With another grim season ahead, Getz did not wait to trade the club's best asset, pitcher Dylan Cease, to the Padres in March. While that was a typical move for a club aiming to rebuild, the roster left behind was, in a word, putrid.

Rams use rally to stop 49ers

Field Level Media

Joshua Karty hit a 37-yard field goal with two seconds remaining and the Los Angeles Rams pulled off an improbable 27-24 victory over the visiting San Francisco 49ers on Sunday by scoring 13 points in the final six minutes, 15 seconds.

Matthew Stafford was 16-of-25 passing for 221 yards and a touchdown, while Kyren Williams ran for 89 yards and two scores on the ground, with one more receiving, as the Rams (1-2) ended a five-game home losing streak against the 49ers.

Tutu Atwell had four receptions for 93 yards as the Rams overcame two separate 14-point deficits.

Brock Purdy was 22-of-30 passing with 292 yards for the 49ers (1-2) and connected on three touchdown passes with Jauan Jennings, who had 11 receptions for 175 yards. Jordan Mason rushed for 77 yards for San Francisco.

Giants 21, Browns 15

Daniel Jones threw two touchdown passes to Malik Nabers as the New York Giants notched a solid 21-15 victory over the host Cleveland Browns on Sunday afternoon. Devin Singletary rushed for a touchdown and Dexter Lawrence had two of the Giants' eight sacks. New York (1-2) held Cleveland to 217 total yards. Jones was 24-of-34 passing for 236 yards and two touchdowns. Nabers caught eight passes for 78 yards and two touchdowns.

Deshaun Watson completed 21 of 37 passes for 196 yards and two touchdowns for the Browns (1-2). Amari Cooper caught seven passes for 86 yards and both scoring catches. Jones and Nabers hooked up twice in the final two minutes of the first half as the Giants took a 21-7 advantage.

Colts 21, Bears 16

Jonathan Taylor ran for 110 yards and two touchdowns, Trey Sermon added a rushing TD and Jaylon Jones snagged two interceptions to boost the host Indianapolis Colts to a 21-16 victory against the Chicago Bears on Sunday. Indianapolis (1-2) overcame a pair of Anthony Richardson interceptions, succeeding with its ground game while shoring up what had been a suspect run defense.

The Colts had 151 rushing yards compared to 63 for the Bears (1-2). Chicago quarterback Caleb Williams, the No. 1 overall pick in the April draft, was 33-of-52 passing for a career-high 363 yards and his first two career TD passes to go with two interceptions.

Vikings 34, Texans 7

Sam Darnold threw four touchdown passes, Aaron Jones accounted for 148 scrimmage yards and a score, and the Minnesota Vikings rolled to a 34-7 win over the Houston Texans on Sunday afternoon in Minneapolis. Darnold completed 17 of 28 passes for 181 yards for Minnesota (3-0).

Jones finished with 19 carries for 102 yards to go along with five catches for 46 yards and a touchdown. C.J. Stroud hit on 20 of 31 passes for 215 yards, one touchdown and two interceptions for Houston (2-1). Cam Akers was limited to nine carries for 21 yards as the Texans struggled on the ground without injured starter Joe Mixon.

Eagles 15, Saints 12

Saquon Barkley rushed for 147 yards and two touchdowns, including the game-winner from 4 yards out with 1:01 remaining, and the visiting Philadelphia Eagles defeated the New Orleans Saints 15-12 on Sunday afternoon. Jalen Hurts passed for 311 yards and Dallas Goedert had 10 catches for 170 yards, including a 61-yard reception that set up the winning score.

In addition, the Eagles (2-1) defense stymied the Saints' high-scoring offense, which had averaged 45.5 points in their first two games. Derek Carr, who entered the game leading the NFL in passer rating (142.4), completed just 14 of 25 for 142 yards for New Orleans (2-1).

geles Chargers on Sunday afternoon.

The Fields-Austin connection closed the scoring with 7:02 left in the game and added insult to injury for Los Angeles (2-1), which lost quarterback Justin Herbert to an apparent ankle issue and star linebacker Joey Bosa to an ailing hip.

Fields finished with 245 yards, the touchdown and an interception on 25-for-32 passing. He also rushed for a score. Austin had four catches for 95 yards. Najee Harris rushed 18 times for 70 yards.

Broncos 26, Buccaneers 7

In his first NFL win, Bo Nix completed 25 of 36 passes for 216 yards and rushed for 47 yards and a touchdown, leading the visiting Denver Broncos to a 26-7 win over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Tyler Badie ran for 70 yards and Courtland Sutton caught seven passes for 68 yards, as the Broncos (1-2) held Tampa Bay scoreless in the second half. Wil Lutz made all four of his field goal attempts for Denver.

Baker Mayfield completed 25 of 33 passes for 163 yards and threw for a touchdown and an interception. Bucky Irving led Tampa Bay (2-1) with 70 rushing yards, while Chris Godwin hauled in six balls for 53 yards and a score.

Packers 30, Titans 14

Malik Willis threw for a touchdown and ran for another on Sunday as the Green Bay Packers never trailed in a 30-14 win over the Tennessee Titans in Nashville, Tenn. Playing against the team that traded him last month for a 7th-round draft choice, Willis completed 13 of 19 passes for 202 yards and added 73 yards on the ground in the best game of his three-year NFL career.

Green Bay (2-1) also got three field goals from kicker Braydon Narveson, who was in training camp with Tennessee. The Packers dominated in total yardage, outgaining the Titans 378-237. Tennessee quarterback Will Levis completed 26 of 34 for 260 yards with two touchdowns.

Panthers 36, Raiders 22

Andy Dalton threw three touchdown passes and sparked what had been a dismal Carolina offense as the Panthers beat the host Las Vegas Raiders 36-22 on Sunday. Dalton, a 36-year-old veteran who became a journeyman after beginning his career with the Cincinnati Bengals, replaced 2023 No. 1 overall draft choice Bryce Young as the starting quarterback just three games into the season. Dalton completed 26 of 37 passes for 319 yards without an interception. Diontae Johnson made eight catches for 122 yards and a touchdown. Chuba Hubbard ran for 114 yards on 21 carries and caught five passes for 55 yards and a score for the Panthers (1-2).

Seahawks 24, Dolphins 3

Zach Charbonnet rushed for a career-high 91 yards and two touchdowns and the defense did the rest as the Seattle Seahawks defeated the visiting Miami Dolphins 24-3 Sunday afternoon. DK Metcalf hauled in a 71-yard touchdown reception and Jason Myers kicked a 56-yard field goal for the Seahawks (3-0). Seattle's defense limited the Dolphins (1-2) to 205 yards of total offense. Miami went 1-for-12 on third-down conversions and 0-for-3 on fourth down while committing 11 penalties for 85 yards. Skylar Thompson, who started at quarterback for Miami after Tua Tagovailoa was placed on injured reserve because of a concussion, completed 13 of 19 passes for 107 yards and was sacked five times.

Lions 20, Cardinals 13

Jared Goff passed for 199 yards and two touchdowns and the Detroit Lions topped the Arizona Cardinals 20-13 on Sunday in Glendale, Ariz. Goff, who was intercepted once, completed 18 of 23 passes. David Montgomery rushed for 105 yards and a touchdown on 23 carries for the Lions (2-1).

Jahmyr Gibbs rushed for 83 yards and scored a 21-yard touchdown on a hook-and-ladder play. Amon-Ra St. Brown caught seven passes for 75 yards and a touchdown. Tyler Murray passed for 207 yards and a touchdown with an interception for Arizona (1-2).

Ravens 28, Cowboys 25

Derrick Henry rushed for 151 yards and two touchdowns on 25 carries, and the Baltimore Ravens survived a late rally by the Dallas Cowboys to earn their first win of the season, a 28-25 victory on Sunday in Arlington, Texas. Cowboys quarterback Dak Prescott scored Dallas' first touchdown with a 1-yard sneak with 8:53 left in the game to cut the margin to 28-12.

Dallas then recovered the onside kick and capitalized with Prescott's 15-yard touchdown pass to Jalen Tolbert with 7:07 left in the game. Lamar Jackson threw for 182 yards with a touchdown and ran for 87 yards and a score. He became the fifth quarterback in NFL history to reach 30 rushing touchdowns within the first seven years of a career.

Chiefs 22, Falcons 17

Patrick Mahomes completed 26 of 39 passes for 217 yards to go along with two touchdowns and an interception as the Kansas City Chiefs escaped with a win over the Atlanta Falcons.

Carson Steele ran for 72 yards as the Chiefs (3-0) won their third one-score game to begin the season. Rashee Rice hauled in 12 receptions for 110 yards and a touchdown.

Kirk Cousins completed 20 of 29 passes for 230 yards and a touchdown for Atlanta (1-2). He was also intercepted once. Drake London caught six passes for a team-high 67 yards and a touchdown. After trailing 14-13 at halftime, the Chiefs marched to the Falcons 1-yard line on the opening possession of the second half but were forced to settle for Harrison Butker's 21-yard field goal with 9:40 remaining in the third quarter.

Mahomes later extended the Kansas City lead to 22-14 when he capped an 11-play, 80-yard drive with a 13-yard scoring strike to JuJu Smith-Schuster with 1:16 to go in the third. Butker missed the ensuing extra-point attempt.

Younghoe Koo's 54-yard field goal on the next possession cut Atlanta's deficit to 22-17 with 12:52 left in the game.

Following a Kansas City punt, the Falcons went on a 15-play, 83-yard drive, but they came up short of the end zone after back-to-back incompletions from the Chiefs 6-yard line and turned the ball over on downs.

Atlanta worked down to the Kansas City 13 on its last drive of the game, and on fourth-and-1, Bijan Robinson was stuffed for a loss of 3 yards.

Taylor confirms Higgins is a go vs. Commanders

Kelsey Conway

Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

The Cincinnati Bengals will get back one of their best players on Monday night as coach Zac Taylor confirmed Saturday wide receiver Tee Higgins will play.

After suffering a hamstring injury in practice days before Cincinnati's home opener, Higgins missed the Bengals' first two games.

For the first time this season, quarterback Joe Burrow will have his full arsenal of offensive weapons.

Taylor said he feels "positive" about safety Vonn Bell's status despite him being downgraded to a non-participant in Friday's practice with a back injury.

The team will use the next 24 hours to gauge how Bell is feeling before deciding if he'll play against Washington. If Bell is unable to go, second-year safety Jordan Battle will start in his place.

Rookie defensive tackle Kris Jenkins is expected to play in his first regular-season game. Jenkins underwent surgery on his thumb prior to Week 1 after injuring it in practice.

Jenkins' return to the field comes at a good time for the Bengals who are dealing with several injuries at defensive tackle.

Taylor officially ruled out Sheldon Rankins (hamstring) to play against the Commanders. B.J. Hill also suffered a hamstring injury in Week 2, but the team is still waiting to decide if he is able to play.

It's worth noting that despite not practicing all week, Hill was not in uniform but still present at practice going through team stretch, signaling he is at least further along in his return than Rankins might be.

Rankins wasn't spotted on the practice fields this week. "The Bengals take on the Commanders on 'Monday Night Football' at 8:15 p.m. ET.

Wide receiver Ja'Marr Chase was given a hefty fine for his unsportsmanlike penalty against the Chiefs last week.

The NFL fined Chase $31,599 for his penalty.

Head referee Alex Kemp said he gave Chase the flag because of "abusive language" towards an official.

Chase believed he was hip-drop tackled by cornerback Trent McDuffie and that's why he was upset.

This is the fourth time Chase has been fined by the NFL in his career. As the Bengals prepare to take on the Commanders on Monday night, Chase opted not to discuss the penalty.

Jaguars rule out Savage vs. Bills

The Jacksonville Jaguars announced safety Darnell Savage has been downgraded to out for the Monday Night Football game against the Buffalo Bills.

He will not travel with the team.

Savage suffered a quad injury last week during practice and will miss his second consecutive game due to the injury. This comes after a standout debut performance against the Miami Dolphins in Week 1.

He practiced on a limited basis this week and was originally listed as questionable for Monday's game.

The Jaguars will turn to rookie defensive back Jarrian Jones again, along with the likely elevation of Christian Braswell from their practice squad. The team is also without cornerback Tyson Campbell, who is on injured reserve with a hamstring injury. Tight end Evan Engram has also been ruled out with a hamstring injury.

Running back Tank Bigsby (shoulder) and wide receiver Tim Jones (foot) are both questionable.

SUNDAY'S ROUNDUP

Mets stop Phils from clinching East

Field Level Media

Brandon Nimmo homered leading off the sixth inning, and the surging New York Mets once again prevented the visiting Philadelphia Phillies from clinching the National League East title with a 2-1 win Sunday night in the finale of a four-game series.

The Mets (87-69) took three of four from the Phillies (92-64), who would have clinched the division with a win either Saturday or Sunday.

New York, which is 18-5 in its last 23 games, moved into a tie for the second NL wild-card spot with the Arizona Diamondbacks, who lost to the Milwaukee Brewers. The teams are two games ahead of the Atlanta Braves, whom the Mets visit for a three-game series beginning Tuesday.

Alec Bohm had an RBI single in the first for the Phillies, who left the bases loaded against Tylor Megill. The Mets built their tying rally with two outs in the second against Zack Wheeler (16-7) when Mark Vientos doubled and scored on Tyrone Taylor's single.

Padres 4, White Sox 2

A three-run rally in the bottom of the eighth inning lifted the San Diego Padres to a win over the visiting Chicago White Sox, moving the winners within a victory of a National League playoff spot and the losers into a tie for history of the worst kind.

Chicago (36-120) equaled the 1962 New York Mets' single-season loss total, the worst in modern MLB history. One loss in the final six games will evict the Mets from the record books.

How the White Sox lost this one was on brand for their season. Ahead 2-1 with six outs left to get, they instead gave it up in a hurry. Donovan Solano doubled to lead off the inning and pinch-hitter Luis Arraez doubled against reliever Fraser Ellard (2-3) to plate pinch-runner Tyler Wade.

Brandon Lockridge pinch-ran for Arraez and got to third via a wild pitch, then scored easily on Jurickson Profar's sacrifice fly to right that snapped the tie. Fernando Tatis Jr. capped the inning with a solo homer to left-center, his 20th of the year.

Brewers 10, Diamondbacks 9

Jake Bauers delivered a go-ahead RBI single in the bottom of the eighth as the host Milwaukee Brewers overcame an eight-run deficit to earn a stunning win against the Arizona Diamondbacks.

Milwaukee (89-67) trailed 8-0 after Arizona struck for a seven-run third that featured back-to-back homers by Josh Bell and Eugenio Suarez and a two-run single from Jake McCarthy. Bell hit a two-run blast, while Suarez had a solo shot.

But the Brewers slowly came all the way back, completing the shocking rally with a four-run eighth.

Braves 5, Marlins 4

Jorge Soler drove in the tiebreaking run with an infield single off the pitcher's glove in the seventh inning as the wild-card contending Atlanta Braves earned a crucial win over the host Miami Marlins.

With two outs in the seventh, Marlins reliever Declan Cronin couldn't handle Soler's comebacker, allowing Michael Harris II to score from third.

Miami (57-99) has the worst record in the NL. Atlanta got solo homers from Ozzie Albies and Gio Urshela.

Yankees 7, Athletics 4

Northern California native Aaron Judge said goodbye to the Oakland Coliseum with his 55th home run, Jason Dominguez and Gleyber Torres also homered and the New York Yankees clinched no worse than a tie for the American League East title with a victory over the Oakland Athletics.

The sweep-completing win, coupled with a second straight Baltimore Orioles loss to the Detroit Tigers, left the Yankees (92-64) with a six-game lead over the Orioles with just six games remaining.

After the A's scored twice in the first inning, the Yankees rallied into the lead for good when Judge launched his home run to center field, a solo shot, in the third after a two-run blast by Dominguez, his second of the season, had tied the score an inning earlier.

Reds fire manager Bell

On Sunday night, the Cincinnati Reds fired manager David Bell.

Bell received a contract extension last summer, but the Reds had a disappointing 2024 season and missed the playoffs. The goal was to win the division, but the Reds have a 76-81 record entering the final week of the season.

Bench coach Freddie Benavides will fill in as the interim manager for the final week of the season.

"David provided the kind of steadiness that we needed in our clubhouse over the last few seasons," Reds president of baseball operations Nick Krall said in a statement. "We felt a change was needed to move the Major League team forward. We have not achieved the success we expected, and we need to begin focusing on 2025."

Bell joined the Reds for the 2019 season and posted a 405-456 record over the last six seasons.

— Charlie Goldsmith, Cincinnati Enquirer

Tigers 4, Orioles 3

Kerry Carpenter hit two solo home runs and the Detroit Tigers held off the host Baltimore Orioles.

Spencer Torkelson also homered for Detroit, which won two of three games in the series despite managing only five hits in the finale. Carpenter smacked both of his blasts off Orioles starter Albert Suarez, including a tiebreaking solo shot to lead off the sixth.

Suarez (8-7) gave up four runs on five hits in five-plus innings while striking out six and walking one.

Giants 2, Royals 0

Grant McCray tripled in a run and scored another in a two-run second inning, Blake Snell combined with three relievers on a shutout and the San Francisco Giants completed a surprising three-game road sweep over the playoff-contending Kansas City Royals.

A seventh straight defeat dropped the Royals (82-74) into a tie with the Detroit Tigers for the second American League wild-card playoff spot with just six games to play.

The Giants (77-79) did all their scoring against Royals ace Seth Lugo (16-9) in the second after Jerar Encarnacion singled with one out. McCray lashed his triple to right field to open the scoring. One out later, he jogged home on a single by Brett Wisely.

Red Sox 8, Twins 1
Red Sox 9, Twins 3

Romy Gonzalez hit a three-run home run and drove in four runs to help the Boston Red Sox sweep a doubleheader against the visiting Minnesota Twins with a 9-3 victory in Game 2.

Gonzalez homered against Minnesota reliever Cole Irvin to give the Red Sox a 3-2 lead in the fifth inning. It was his sixth home run of the season. He also hit a sacrifice fly in Boston's sixth-run sixth.

Minnesota starting pitcher Zebby Matthews was pulled after he surrendered a double to Cedanne Rafaela with two outs in the fifth and the Twins leading 2-0. Irvin (6-6) replaced Matthews and walked Jarren Duran before giving up the three-run home run to Gonzalez. Matthews allowed one run on two hits with six strikeouts and two walks in 4⅓ innings.

Minnesota (81-75) now trails the Kansas City Royals and Detroit Tigers by one game for the American League's third wild-card spot.

The Red Sox prevailed 8-1 in the first game.

Triston Casas hit three home runs and drove in seven to propel Boston. Casas hit a pair of three-run home runs off Minnesota starter Pablo Lopez and added a solo homer against Brent Headrick.

Angels 9, Astros 8

Zach Neto had six RBIs on a two-run homer, a solo shot, and a three-run double in the ninth inning off Houston closer Josh Hader as the Los Angeles Angels posted a wild victory over the Astros.

After losing the first three of this four-game set, Los Angeles (63-93) trailed 4-0 after five innings Sunday. But it scored in each inning after, then held off a ninth-inning charge from the American League West-leading Astros.

Houston (85-71) went ahead in the bottom of the eighth via an RBI double from Yainer Diaz (three hits) and a pinch-hit, run-scoring single from Shay Whitcomb. However, Hader (8-8) blew just his fourth save in 37 attempts.

Rangers 6, Mariners 5

With two outs in the bottom of the ninth, Marcus Semien hit the walk-off RBI single to complete the Texas Rangers' comeback win over the Seattle Mariners in Arlington, Texas.

Semien's single to left scored Leody Taveras, who had singled and stolen second in front of him. The Rangers were able to avoid getting swept by the Mariners, and they broke Seattle's three-game winning streak.

The Mariners' comfortable 5-0 lead evaporated when the Rangers cut into the deficit with a four-run sixth inning. Taveras then hit the game-tying solo home run in the seventh.

Dodgers 6, Rockies 5

Shohei Ohtani tied the game with a home run to lead off the ninth inning and Mookie Betts followed with a game-ending blast as the Los Angeles Dodgers rallied for a victory over the visiting Colorado Rockies.

Ohtani, the favorite to become the first primary designated hitter to win an MVP award, had four hits with two stolen bases. His home run gave him 53 on the season to go along with 55 steals.

Teoscar Hernandez and Enrique Hernandez also hit home runs as the Dodgers (93-63) remained three games ahead of the San Diego Padres in the National League West with six games to play. The Dodgers and Padres open a three-game series at Los Angeles on Tuesday.

Pirates 2, Reds 0

Pittsburgh rookie ace Paul Skenes struck out nine in five scoreless innings while Oneil Cruz and Nick Yorke homered to lead the visiting Pittsburgh Pirates past the Cincinnati Reds.

In tossing five shutout innings without a walk, the hard-throwing rookie right-hander lowered his ERA to 1.99.

Skenes (11-3) is the first pitcher in MLB history to have a sub-2.20 ERA and 150-plus strikeouts in their first 21 games. He also compiled his 16th game with seven-plus strikeouts and enters the final week with 167, a Pittsburgh rookie record.

Rays 4, Blue Jays 3

Christopher Morel's sacrifice fly and Brandon Lowe's homer helped the Tampa Bay Rays close out a strong final homestand, sweeping the Toronto Blue Jays in St. Petersburg, Fla.

After the Blue Jays (73-83) tied it 2-2 in the top of the seventh on Ernie Clement's RBI single, Morel plated Jose Siri with the go-ahead run in the bottom of the frame.

Lowe added his 20th homer this season in the eighth, which proved pivotal after Vladimir Guerrero Jr. stroked a ninth-inning RBI single against Edwin Uceta.

Cardinals 2, Guardians 1

Andre Pallante allowed just one hit over seven innings as the St. Louis Cardinals edged the visiting Cleveland Guardians.

Masyn Winn walked to plate the go-ahead run in the seventh inning for the Cardinals (79-77), who won for the fifth time in seven games.

Gavin Williams allowed one run on four hits in 5⅓ innings for the Guardians (90-67). He walked two and struck out three. Reliever Tim Herrin (5-1) took the loss.

Cubs 5, Nationals 0

Shota Imanaga pitched seven scoreless innings and the Chicago Cubs hit three home runs in a win over the visiting Washington Nationals.

Mike Tauchman, Michael Busch and Miguel Amaya went deep for Chicago (80-76), which took three of four from Washington (69-87).

The start of the game was delayed two hours and 20 minutes by rain.

LPGA TOUR

Ko wins again at Kroger Queen City Championship

Beth Ann Nichols

Golfweek | USA TODAY NETWORK

Lydia Ko picked up right where she left off — winning. On the heels of an Olympic gold medal and the AIG Women's British Open victory at St. Andrews, Ko added another first-place prize at the 2024 Kroger Queen City Championship, topping the field by five strokes after a three-week break. Incredibly, she had only one bogey the entire week at TPC River's Bend.

In her post-round interview with Golf Channel's Amy Rogers, Ko called this stretch of golf "surreal" and put any talk of retirement on a back burner with a newish goal.

"I think it's always been the goal of mine to do the career grand slam," said Ko, who currently owns three different majors. "I thought that would be so out there.

"I feel like I've already been part of this fairytale, so why not?"

The newest member of the LPGA Hall of Fame now owns 22 LPGA career titles. She has three LPGA official wins this season, plus the gold medal. Ko closed with a 9-under 63 to run away from former No. 1 Jeeno Thitikul. Ko finished at 23 under for the tournament.

This marks the first time since 2016 — when she claimed the JTBC Classic and Chevron Championship titles — the 27-year-old Kiwi has won in back-to-back starts on the LPGA.

She joins Nelly Korda as the only other player with at least three wins this season. Korda, who finished in a share of fifth in Cincinnati, won six times in the first half of the season and leads the Rolex Player of the Year list by 100 points. (Ko did not receive any POY points for her gold-medal performance in Paris, though she did get that valuable LPGA Hall of Fame point.)

way she ended the summer, on a hot streak, extending her top-10 run to her last five consecutive starts, including the Olympics.

World No. 1 Korda will have three weeks at home before heading to South Korea for the LPGA's BMW Ladies Championship. The LPGA heads to the Walmart NW Arkansas Championship, Sept. 27-29, before a four-event swing through China, Korea, Malaysia and Japan.

"I don't think I had my best stuff, but played some solid golf here and there," said Korda, who closed with a 68. "Definitely didn't capitalize on the par-5s. I had a lot of irons in my hands and came out with pars. A little disappointing there.

"Overall, happy with the way I played coming off last week and my energy levels."

South Korea's Haeran Ryu birdied five consecutive holes on the back nine en route to a closing 67. She finished solo third.

Broadhurst prevails at Pebble Beach

Field Level Media

Englishman Paul Broadhurst ground out an even-par 72 at Pebble Beach Golf Links to win the PURE Insurance Championship on Sunday in Pebble Beach, Calif.

Broadhurst opened the day with a five-shot lead on the field after firing a round of 64 on Saturday. He made key par saves down the stretch to finish the week at 14-under 202, three ahead of Germany's Alex Cejka, whose 64 was the round of the day.

It marked the seventh victory of Broadhurst's PGA Tour Champions career. After ending a winless drought dating to 2018 at the Invited Celebrity Classic in April, Broadhurst has two wins under his belt this season.

Broadhurst's only birdies Sunday came at the par-4 fourth hole and the par-5 18th. He converted 14 pars, remaining steady on the back nine despite bogeys at the 13th and 15th holes.

"I've never been in that position before, having a five-shot lead," said Broadhurst, 59. "I just went out and just tried to play solid, and felt like I did for nine holes. I was reasonably comfortable and just hit a couple of poor shots to the right on 12 and 13, and then you start thinking a little bit."

Broadhurst missed the green at the par-3 17th, but he chipped on and made a tricky par putt to stay two in front of Cejka.

"It was massive," Broadhurst said of the putt. "... I didn't want to shoot over par and win. My kids would be giving me stick back home if I shot over par."

Cejka made five birdies over his first 10 holes before holing out for eagle at the par-4 13th and birdieing the last hole, getting to 11-under 205 to set the clubhouse lead that Broadhurst had to beat.

Rocco Mediate (69), Doug Barron (70) and Fiji's Vijay Singh (71) tied for third at 10 under.

The unique event had 80 PGA Tour Champions pros play one round at Pebble Beach Golf Links and one round at Spyglass Hill Golf Course before the low 50 and ties advanced to Sunday's final round at Pebble Beach.

The pros also played alongside amateur and junior players who competed on separate leaderboards. Daniel Ferguson won in the First Tee boys' division, and Nicole Iniakov captured the title in the First Tee girls' division. The team of John Vegas and Ryan Harrington won the pro-am competition.

Smith, Ripper GC win Team Championship

Field Level Media

Cameron Smith and Ripper GC won a LIV Golf team title for their native Australia, not to mention boatloads of cash for themselves.

The all-Australian team of Smith, Lucas Herbert, Matt Jones and Marc Leishman edged 4Aces GC and won the LIV Golf Team Championship on Sunday outside Dallas, bringing a close to the third season of the Saudi-backed breakaway tour.

The final round of the team championship featured 18 holes of stroke play at Maridoe Golf Club in Carrollton, Texas, with every player's score combining to create their respective teams' scores. The four winners in Saturday's match-play semifinals qualified for the final.

Herbert and Smith made hugely important birdie putts down the stretch to lift Ripper to 11-under 277 and a three-stroke victory.

Tied for second at 8 under were Dustin Johnson's 4Aces, which won the team title in the inaugural 2022 season, and the underdog Iron Heads GC. Legion XIII — playing without captain Jon Rahm of Spain, the 2024 individual champion — placed fourth at 6 under.

Ripper is the third different team to win the LIV team championship in three seasons. They captured $14 million of the $50 million prize pool.

There was a three-way tie at 8 under featuring Ripper, 4Aces and Iron Heads with just a few holes for each team to finish. Herbert, atoning for a triple bogey early in his round, was powering Ripper's late move with three straight birdies at Nos. 15-17, as the team eked ahead at 9 under.

Harold Varner III made a long birdie at his last hole, No. 1, to bring 4Aces into a tie with Ripper at 9 under. But Herbert then rolled a slippery birdie putt into the cup, following it in with an emphatic fist pump, as Ripper moved back in front at 10 under.

Patrick Reed of 4Aces had a 5-foot birdie try at the final hole, but it curled dramatically right to left and stayed out. Smith then rolled in his fifth birdie of the day at No. 17 to give Ripper a two-shot lead.

Johnson, playing in the final group with Smith, Iron Heads captain Kevin Na and Legion XIII's Tyrrell Hatton, had a chance to bring 4Aces to 10 under as well, but his birdie try at No. 17 rolled past the cup.

Then, after Smith teed off at No. 18, Johnson's tee shot sailed left and into a water hazard, essentially clinching Ripper's victory.

Smith led Ripper with a 4-under 68. Herbert shot a 3-under 69, and Jones and Leishman each posted 70. Johnson and Reed scored the best rounds for 4Aces at 69.

Na and Japan's Jinichiro Kozuma led Iron Heads with rounds of 69. Hatton, of England, paced Legion with a 68 as LIV alternate John Catlin stood in for Rahm over the weekend while Rahm dealt with "severe flu symptoms."

The Iron Heads finished last in the regular-season standings but upset Brooks Koepka's Smash GC and Bryson DeChambeau's Crushers GC (the defending champions) in match play Friday and Saturday to advance to the final.

Horschel beats McIlroy in playoff at BMW PGA Championship

Cameron Jourdan

Golfweek | USA TODAY NETWORK

2024 has been the year of so close, yet so far for Rory McIlroy.

On Sunday, the latest saga involved a playoff against Billy Horschel, a fellow past champion of the BMW PGA Championship at Wentworth Club in Surrey, England. But the final sentence was the same.

Horschel topped McIlroy on the second playoff hole to win, making an eagle putt on the par-5 18th. His eagle attempt went right in the center of the cup. McIlroy's barely missed right.

Horschel had to birdie the 18th in regulation to get into a playoff with McIlroy and Thriston Lawrence, who hit his third shot in the water on the first playoff hole and didn't make it to the second playoff hole.

McIlroy had a chance to win it in regulation, but his birdie attempt missed low.

Both Horschel and McIlroy made birdie on the first playoff hole, but it's Horschel taking the title and adding another what-if to McIlroy's 2024 season.

WNBA PLAYOFFS

Thomas carries Sun past Fever in Game 1

Field Level Media

Alyssa Thomas recorded her WNBA-leading 15th career triple-double and fourth in the postseason as the Connecticut Sun overwhelmed the visiting Indiana Fever 93-69 in the opener of their best-of-three series on Sunday in Uncasville, Conn.

Thomas finished with 12 points, 13 assists and 10 rebounds, and Marina Mabrey led all scorers with a game-high 27 points off the Connecticut bench. Mabrey shot 5 of 12 from 3-point range, knocking down almost as many from beyond the arc as Indiana (6 of 28) had as a team.

Indiana star Caitlin Clark, introduced as the unanimous 2024 WNBA Rookie of the Year, was 4 of 17 from the floor, including 2 of 13 from 3-point range, and went to the foul line just twice (making one) for 11 total points. She also had a team-high eight assists.

Fever teammate Kelsey Mitchell had 21 points but was just 2 of 10 from distance, and center Aliyah Boston had a double-double with 17 points and 11 rebounds.

The Sun host the Fever on Wednesday, with Game 3, if necessary, on Friday in Indianapolis.

Lynx 102, Mercury 95

Napheesa Collier scored a season-high 38 points as the Minnesota Lynx held off a comeback bid from the Phoenix Mercury to win Game 1 of their first-round playoff series in Minneapolis.

Collier shot 11-of-19 from the floor and 13-of-14 from the free-throw line while adding six rebounds and four assists for Minnesota, which took a one-game lead over the Mercury in the best-of-three series. Kayla McBride scored 20 points for the Lynx, Bridget Carleton added 12 and Myisha Hines-Allen scored 10.

Natasha Cloud led Phoenix with 33 points and 10 assists, while Diana Taurasi scored 21 points. Kahleah Copper chipped in 16 points and Brittney Griner had 10 points.

Liberty 83, Dream 69

Liberty beat the visiting Atlanta Dream in Game 1 of their WNBA playoff series.

Breanna Stewart added 20 points, 11 rebounds and three blocks for the top-seeded Liberty, who never trailed and led by as many as 22. Game 2 of the best-of-three first-round series is Tuesday in New York.

Fiebich, whose previous career-high was 16 points, started on Sunday after making just 15 during the regular season. She shot 7-for-8 from the floor, including all four of her 3-point attempts.

Sabrina Ionescu made three triples and had 17 points, and Betnijah Laney-Hamilton added 10 points for New York.

Rhyne Howard had 14 points to lead the eighth-seeded Dream, who won at

New York in Thursday's regular-season finale to clinch the final playoff spot. Tina Charles tallied 12 points and seven rebounds, while Allisha Gray and Naz Hillmon each scored nine.

Aces 78, Storm 67

A'ja Wilson scored 21 points, Tiffany Hayes added 20 off the bench and a strong defensive performance in the fourth quarter led the host Las Vegas Aces to a win over the Seattle Storm in Game 1 of a best-of-three, first-round playoff series.

Las Vegas held Seattle without a field goal in the fourth quarter, and the Storm didn't score in the frame until Skylar Diggins-Smith made a pair of free throws with 4:07 to go. Seattle went 0-for-12 from the floor in the final 10 minutes of action.

The Aces, struggling to generate offense against Seattle's own stifling defense, were only up by five when Diggins-Smith went to the foul line. They didn't score in the fourth until Kelsey Plum made a layup with 7:08 left, Plum's only points of the night.

Following the late free throws from Diggins-Smith, Las Vegas rattled off eight unanswered points to close the game.

Chelsea Gray, who finished with 16 points for the Aces, bookended the game-closing run with a pair of baskets.

SINGAPORE — McLaren's Lando Norris dominated the Singapore Grand Prix from start to finish on Sunday to take another chunk out of Max Verstappen's Formula One championship lead. The 24-year-old Briton roared away from pole position at the floodlit Marina Bay circuit and, despite living dangerously at times as he twice brushed the unforgiving walls, led every lap to the chequered flag.

Verstappen finished second for Red Bull, a massive 20.945 seconds behind his main rival, and McLaren's Oscar Piastri was third in a sweltering night race run over 62 laps in exhausting heat and humidity.

Verstappen's 59 point lead over Norris was cut to 52 with six rounds, including three sprints, remaining, while McLaren stretched their lead over Red Bull in the constructors' standings to 41 points.

"It was an amazing race. A few too many close calls, I had a couple of little moments in the middle, but it was well controlled, I think," said Norris after his third career victory and third of the season.

"The car was mega. I could push, we were flying the whole race and at the end could just chill. So it was a nice race, still tough, I'm a bit out of breath, but a very fun one."

Norris could have also had a bonus point for fastest lap but RB's Daniel Ricciardo pitted for a third time for soft tyres and snatched it at the end of what many suspect could be the Australian's last race.

Extraordinarily for Singapore, there was no safety car deployment in a largely incident-free race with only two retirements.

"On a weekend when we knew that we were going to struggle, to be P2 is a good achievement," said Verstappen after what amounted to a lonely race.

"Of course we are not happy with second. Now we just have to try and improve more and more and that's what we will try to do."

George Russell took fourth place for Mercedes with Charles Leclerc fifth for Ferrari and seven times world champion Lewis Hamilton sixth for Mercedes.

Last year's winner Carlos Sainz was seventh for Ferrari, ahead of fellow-Spaniard Fernando Alonso.

Gotham's early goal holds up in shutout

Field Level Media

Yazmeen Ryan's goal in the third minute proved to be the difference on Sunday as Gotham FC notched a 1-0 victory over the visiting Utah Royals in Harrison, N.J.

The victory for Gotham (13-4-4, 43 points) moves them into third place in the NWSL table, one point ahead of the Kansas City Current and one point behind the Washington Spirit with five games remaining in the regular season. It's the third consecutive loss for Utah (4-14-3, 15 points), which remains in last place, far outside of the playoff picture.

Ryan's goal was created when Lynn Williams picked off a Royals pass in their own half of the field with relative ease. After a give-and-go with a teammate, Williams streaked down the left wing and into the box, then played a long ball across it. Ryan, with one touch of her left foot, redirected the ball with precision into the back of the net for her fourth goal of the year.

For Williams, Gotham's captain, the score marked her 30th regular season assist in NWSL play, a figure matched only by Sofia Huerta and Jess McDonald.

Despite firing 16 shots and putting 10 of those attempts on-target, Gotham couldn't put another ball past Utah keeper Mandy Haught, who tallied nine saves on the day. Haught had a memorable stop in the 33rd minute, when she leapt into the air to knock a long-range attempt from Williams over the bar.

The win for Gotham was its fifth in its last six matches.

MLS Union 4, D.C. United 0

A two-goal night for Daniel Gazdag and two assists from 20-year-old Quinn Sullivan powered the Philadelphia Union over D.C. United 4-0 Sunday night in Chester, Pa.

With the victory, the Union moved back into ninth place — the final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference — with four matches remaining.

Sullivan got the Philadelphia (9-12-9, 36 points) scoring started in the 13th minute by splitting two defenders on the right sideline and running around another to draw in the defense and send a pass across the face of goal. On the other end was Mikael Uhre, who stood undefended for an easy tap-in.

Less than three minutes later, Philadelphia sent in another cross that D.C. (8-13-9, 33 points) initially cut off, but Gazdag sprinted into the box to intercept the subsequent loose ball, shooting from the right side of the 18-yard box into the left-side netting.

In the second half, Sullivan picked up a second assist in 51st minute when the young winger received a pass under pressure, broke away and ran to the endline. Sullivan sent in a cross that Tai Baribo headed into the back of the net, giving Philadelphia a three-goal lead.

Gazdag's second came when the match was already heavily in the home side's favor.
